It has come to my attention that this regained popularity in recent weeks. As the author, I'm deeply humbled by the support in the form of reblogs and likes even despite the crass language. I'm not Lakota or from the areas of these tribes. I'm from a Pueblo in New Mexico (shout-out to the Pueblo camp at standing Rock!) And Navajo Nation. I made this post at s tumultuous time in my life when I had accrued so much capital and privilege in the white man's world. Back when these were working links, I was a community organizer that went into a post traumatic stress disorder episode while this post was getting popular 2 years ago when Standing Rock was still at camp. I ask folks to reblog this out of respect to the many people and messages passed that allows for campaigns like these to exist. I'll never know how much was raised but know that y'all were a part of something huge and important. That two years is not a long time and progress is like watching grass grow progress is like watching grass grow.

Something I find incredibly cool is that they've found neandertal bone tools made from polished rib bones, and they couldn't figure out what they were for for the life of them.

Until, of course, they showed it to a traditional leatherworker and she took one look at it and said "Oh yeah sure that's a leather burnisher, you use it to close the pores of leather and work oil into the hide to make it waterproof. Mine looks just the same."

“Wait you’re still using the exact same fucking thing 50,000 years later???”

“Well, yeah. We’ve tried other things. Metal scratches up and damages the hide. Wood splinters and wears out. Bone lasts forever and gives the best polish. There are new, cheaper plastic ones, but they crack and break after a couple years. A bone polisher is nearly indestructible, and only gets better with age. The more you use a bone polisher the better it works.”

It’s just.

50,000 years. 50,000. And over that huge arc of time, we’ve been quietly using the exact same thing, unchanged, because we simply haven’t found anything better to do the job.

i also like that this is a “ask craftspeople” thing, it reminds me of when art historians were all “the fuck” about someone’s ear “deformity” in a portrait and couldn’t work out what the symbolism was until someone who’d also worked as a piercer was like “uhm, he’s fucked up a piercing there”. interdisciplinary shit also needs to include non-academic approaches because crafts & trades people know shit ok

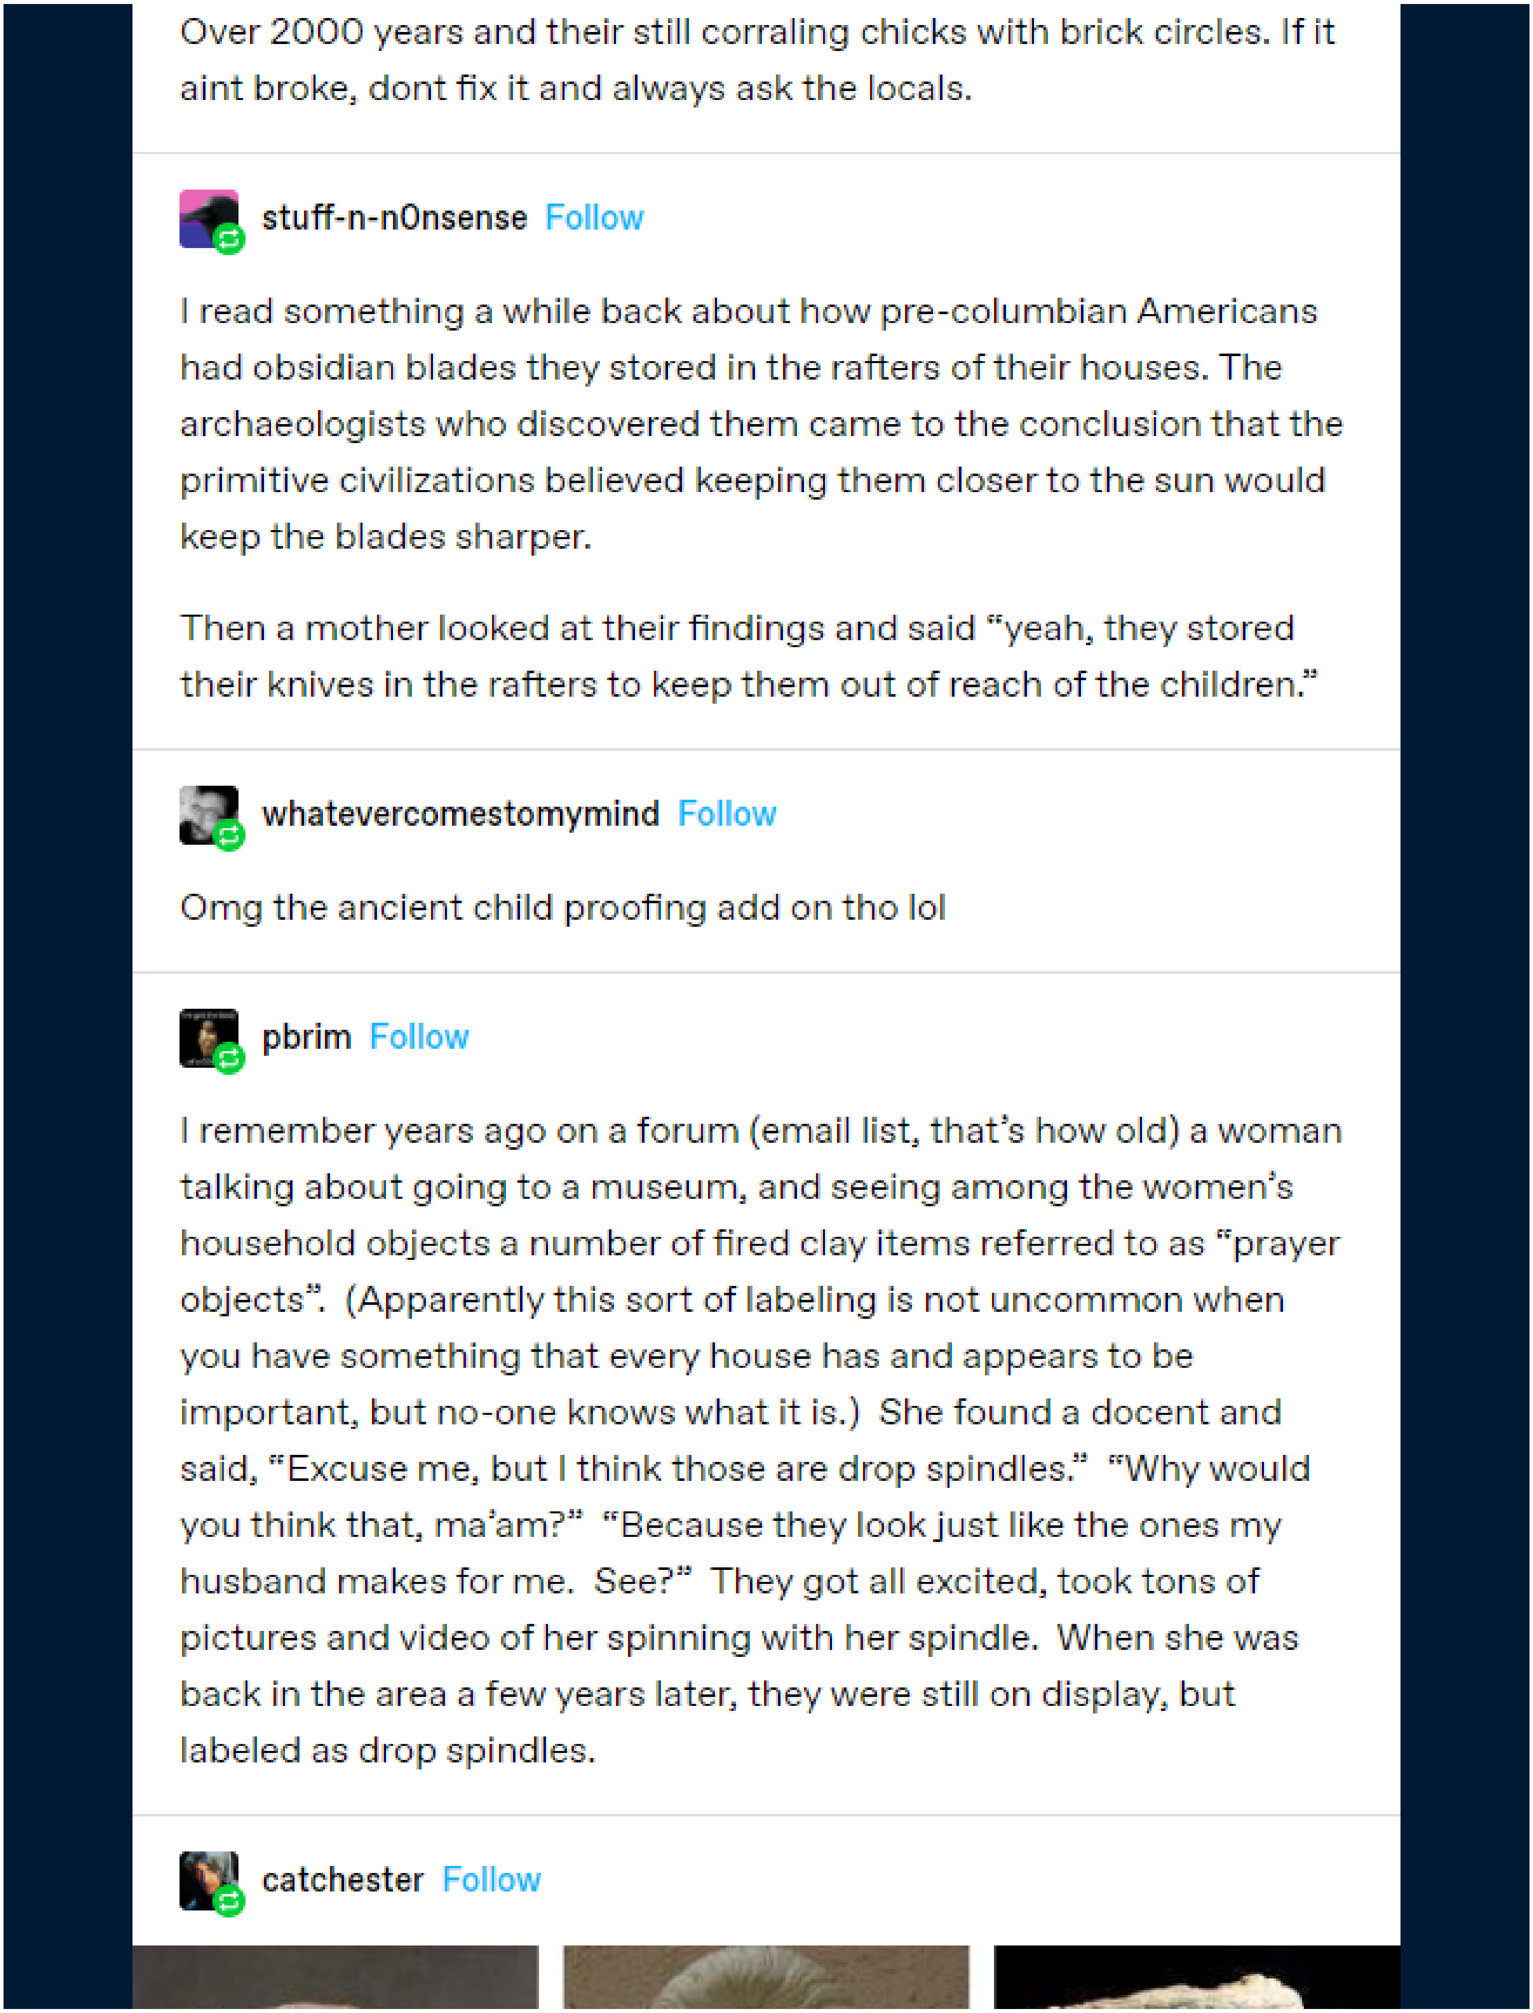
One of my professors often tells us about a time he, as and Egyptian Archaeologist, came down upon a ring of bricks one brick high. In the middle of a house. He and his fellow researchers could not fpr the life of them figure out what tf it could possibly have been for. Until he decided to as a laborer, who doesnt even speak English, what it was. The guy gestures for my prof to follow him, and shows him the same ring of bricks in a nearby modern house. Said ring is filled with baby chicks, while momma hen is out in the yard having a snack. The chicks can’t get over the single brick, but mom can step right over.



Over 2000 years and their still corraling chicks with brick circles. If it aint broke, dont fix it and always ask the locals.

I read something a while back about how pre-columbian Americans had obsidian blades they stored in the rafters of their houses. The archaeologists who discovered them came to the conclusion that the primitive civilizations believed keeping them closer to the sun would keep the blades sharper.

Then a mother looked at their findings and said “yeah, they stored their knives in the rafters to keep them out of reach of the children.”

I remember years ago on a forum (email list, that’s how old) a woman talking about going to a museum, and seeing among the women’s household objects a number of fired clay items referred to as “prayer objects”. (Apparently this sort of labeling is not uncommon when you have something that every house has and appears to be important, but no-one knows what it is.) She found a docent and said, “Excuse me, but I think those are drop spindles.” “Why would you think that, ma’am?” “Because they look just like the ones my husband makes for me. See?” They got all excited, took tons of pictures and video of her spinning with her spindle. When she was back in the area a few years later, they were still on display, but labeled as drop spindles.

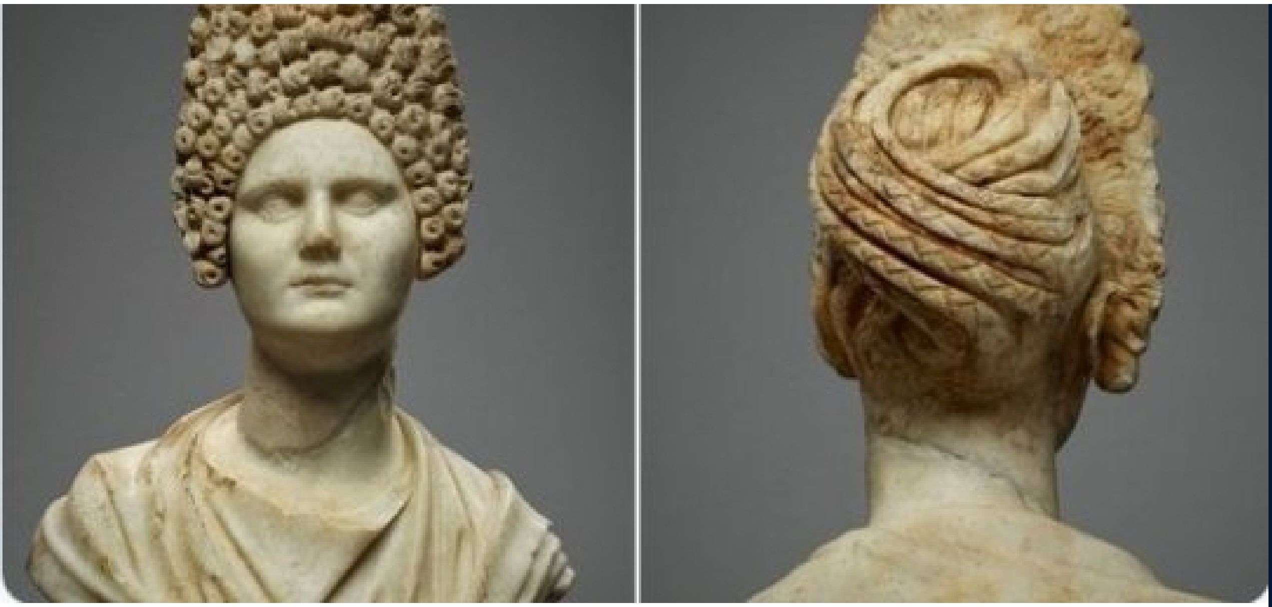
So ancient Roman statues have some really weird hairstyles. Archaeologists just couldn't figure them out. They didn't have hairspray or modern hair bands, or elastic at all, but some of these things defied gravity better than Marge Simpson's beehive.



Eventually they decided, wigs. Must be wigs. Or maybe hats. Definitely not real hair.

A hairdresser comes a long, looks at a few and is like, “Yeah, they’re sewn.”

“Don’t be silly!” the archaeologists cry. “How foolish, sewn hair indeed! LOL!”

So she went away and recreated them on real people using a needle and thread and the mystery of Roman hairstyles was solved.

Bride cancels wedding after discovering mother 'paid fiancé' to date her

Times Now · 1 day ago

She explained, "She met him through a friend and paid him to go out on our first date (to a five-star restaurant). She paid for all of our dates and, of course, my wedding because she was so desperate for me to get married and he was just in it for the money."

The woman thinks that her mother came up with the whole fiasco because she'd recently come out as bisexual.

"I had come out as bisexual about a year before all of this. I wonder if it was because she was so desperate to see me with a man and not a woman," she said.

She concluded by saying that she was now dating someone she wanted, "I am now dating a wonderful woman and my mother and I no longer speak."

really wasn't any word for "handsome heavyset man" before the LGBT community came along and opened our eyes to the truth. Calling skinny buff dudes bears is like all those douchebros who are like "i want a thicc gorl" points to stick thin woman who just has big booby

luscious-theomorphic

THANK you. And originally it DID just mean fat hairy men exclusively, it was only later that 'musclebears' became a thing. But Bear was a reaction to the gay male culture's obsession with what we now call a twink (which is, to whit: a thin, hairless, youthful man between 18-25), as well as a reaction to the idea that gay men had to be femme in order to be gay, as well as offering body positivity to gay men who were fat, which is an important distinction–Bear Pride is a gay male fat positivity movement/identity, that's real important and we gotta not forget that, because that support and representation and pride is a protest against the part of gay culture that toxically commodifies male bodies and demands thinness and hairlessness. /soapbox can we like...get rid of the so-called leather and rubber "pride flags"? it's honestly ridiculous and offensive to the lgbtq community. those aren't pride flags.

dead-dyke

The leather pride flag is the second oldest pride flag. It has been at almost every single US pride parade and protest in history.

It's older then you are, it's older then I am. The leather community is responsible for pride. Leather daddies were the ones chasing away cops when they tried to arrest us for being queer in public back when Pride Parades were illegal in the US. They are still the ones chasing away cops and corporations from smaller pride events and those that aren't sanctioned by Wells Fargo. The leather community is essential to the queer community and has a long and rich history.

Please fuck off if you're not going to learn the actual history of pride.

And don't fucking out your hate in our tags, asshole.

budgiesmuggled

The leather pride flag represents an expression of self which is inherently queer, and a community which has been around for generations. It is not offensive to the LGBT+ community in any way. I have seen cis gay and bisexual men standing shoulder-to-shoulder with trans men, all of them united by their leather community roots. The leather community is more diverse and nuanced than you perhaps know, but that is no reason for you to shit on a community you don't understand.

Here is a photograph from 1998, displaying the leather pride flag, the bear gay pride flag, and the rainbow flag. This is our history.

Just because you don't know the history, doesn't mean it isn't there. Be humble, and always assume you have more to learn. Hatred, and outright dismissal of communities you know nothing about, is the most aggressively anti-LGBT thing I can imagine.

The leather community has always included trans people, lesbians, gay men, and bisexuals. The leather community is global and nuanced. The leather community is where many of us encounter our found families, and our lovers. For you to dismiss that is cold-hearted and ignorant. Just because queer sex is involved, doesn't make the community dirty or bad.

Do you know why the community pushed for, and against, closing the bathhouses during the 80s? Do you know who organized awareness campaigns about HIV, even way back when it was still called GIRD. Do you know who created the safe sex pamphlets, the classes, who pushed for disclosing your health history to partners, who distributed contraceptives and condoms and dental dams at parties and meetings and baths? Do you even know where the safe sex education we have now comes from? Do you know where a bulk of the language about consent came from? Do you have any good god damn idea what the kink communities have done for us, and continue to do for us?

one day some of you will actually go outside and go to pride and you're going to meet old black queens who refers to themselves as femme, you'll meet people from small towns who still use the word transsexual, you'll see that your local activist organization set up a stall about your local LGBT history that includes leather bar's history, you'll see lesbians in groups refer to themselves as "guys" and "boys", you'll see someone with breasts and pasties and little else have "he / him" painted on his chest, and you'll be so caught up with your terminally online attitude that instead of appreciating the wide diversity of people who exist in the LGBT community who are brave enough to share themselves you'll just be formulating posts and tweets in your head for when get home about how "problematic" it all was and it's honestly tragic robert pattinson cooking pasta on facetime for gq interview is a work of art

> I watch as he pours dry penne into a cereal bowl, covers it with water, and places it in the microwave for eight minutes. He says using penne is already new territory for him. Usually he uses…well… "Do you know the pasta that's, like, a little, it's like a blob, a sort of squiggly blob?"
> "Gnocchi?"

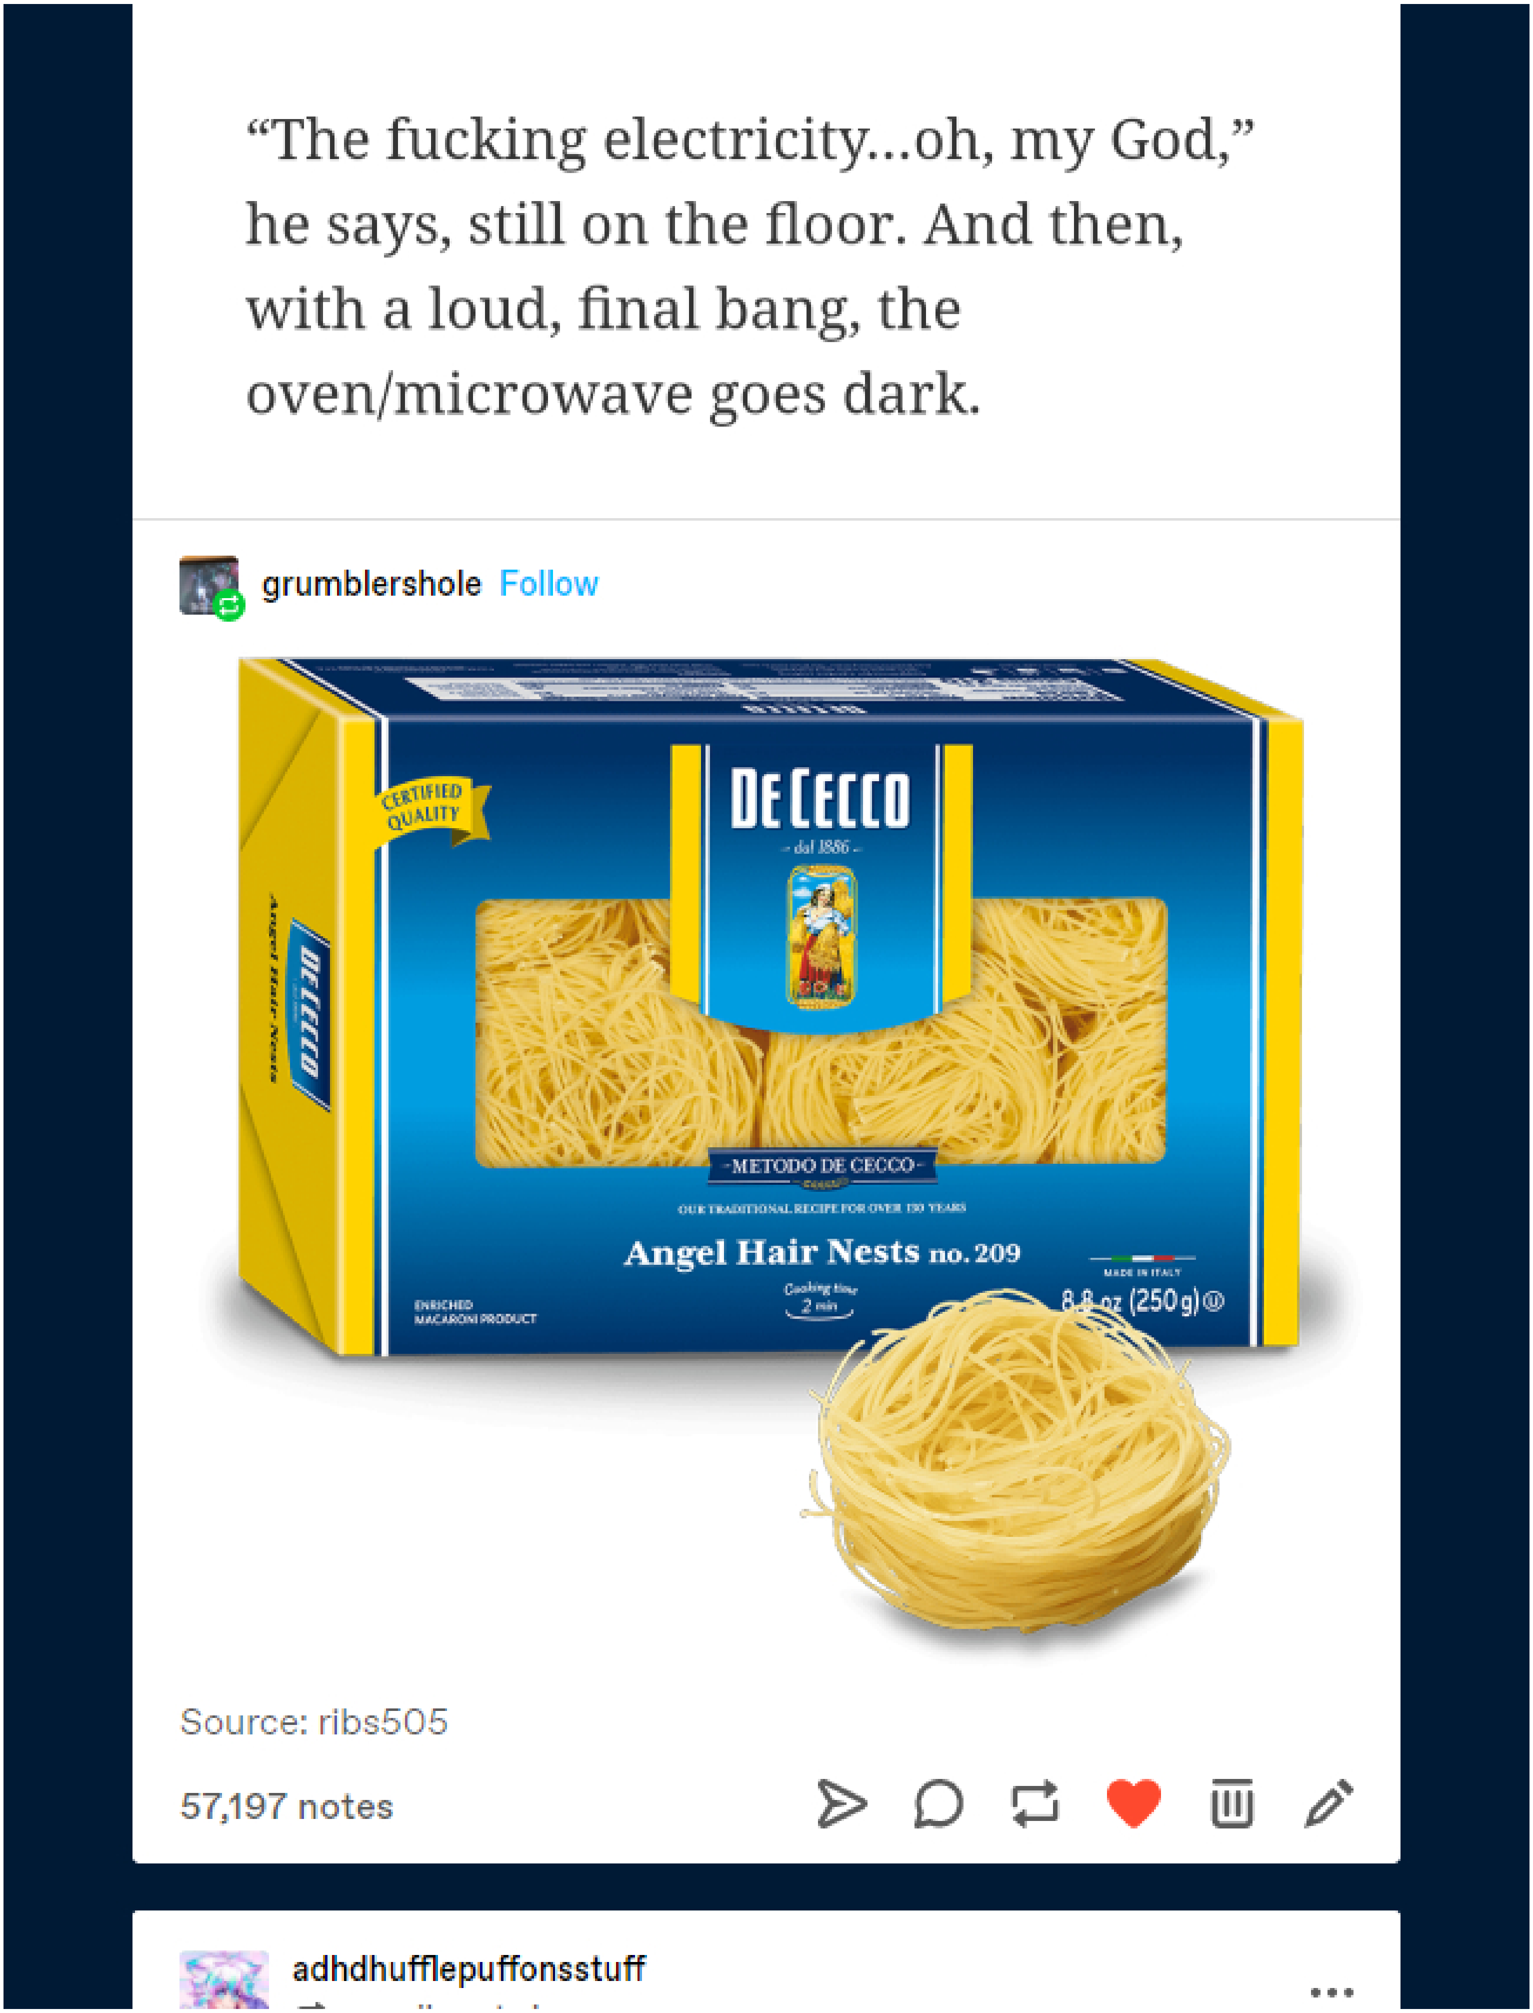
"No, no, no, no, it looks like—what would you even call it? It looks like a sort of messy…like, the hair bun on a girl."

"I have literally no idea what you're talking about," I say.

"There was one type of pasta that worked. It definitely wasn't penne."

"You look like you're cooking meth," I say, because he does.

At this point, he accidentally ignites one of his latex gloves, which promptly melts onto his palm. He yells in pain. Then he gingerly holds up the finished product: some approximation of a P, followed by a C, for Piccolini Cuscino, burned into the top of a hamburger bun.



“The fucking electricity…oh, my God,” he says, still on the floor. And then, with a loud, final bang, the oven/microwave goes dark.

Okay so a production of Hamlet that ends with “Goodnight, sweet prince,” etc. and then Horatio looks up and sees the audience for the first time and is both shocked and furious, because his world is falling apart and you sat there and watched.

cadhla-marie

This idea would go fantastically well with my director’s idea that Hamlet knows the whole time that he’s in a play. He had me (when I played Hamlet) interact with the audience, exchange looks with people in the front row, deliver my soliloquies to people in the first few rows casually like I was just talking to them, and I even had the few rows casually like I was just talking to them, and I even had the idea to not freeze and just walk about the stage when other characters had their little 'asides,' which he allowed me to keep in.

Basically, if Hamlet continuously acknowledges the audience unnoticed by all the other characters (almost Fleabag-style) and then suddenly he's gone, and obviously he knew he'd have to be gone at the end, and then poor Horatio is left all alone to finally realize there was someone else there the entire time, now that would make it all the more devastating.

wisteria-lodge Follow

There's no difference between the Danish courtiers, who showed up because they wanted to see the Mad Prince get his butt kicked in a staged sword-fight, and us the audience (who… also showed up to watch Hamlet loose a sword fight.)

I want to see a production where Horatio just stares at us, and screams "Now cracks a noble heart!" with the subtext "You fucking fuckers. He was better than all of you, you watched him die, and you just stood there.

Then, he just silently cries over the body. For like FIVE MINUTES. And the courtiers peel away into the wings, one by one, until Horatio is alone on stage with a lot of dead bodies. It starts getting uncomfortable. You're thinking… is the play over? Am I supposed to go? (hamlet is just about the only play where the final scene is cut about 50% time, so use that uncertainty, use that ambiguity.) Maybe some people do get up to go. There's definitely muttering. And then there's smashing sounds coming from the direction of the box office, and Horatio looks up, with an expression like something's gone wrong.

But then he says, "Why do the drums come hither?" Fortinbras enters though the audience, and the play continues.

(I also think it would be really cool to cut for intermission right after Claudius freaks out and breaks up the play-within-a-play. Just imagine it: king yells "Lights! Lights! Lights!" And the houselights come up.)

illonink Follow

All good. And also–

As Hamlet is dying in Horatio's arms, he puts his hand on Horatio's face and turns it toward us. And that's when Horatio sees the theater.

white people ruined the non sexual intimacy of nakedness methinks

i think that for a species that come into the world naked and have such an easy time understanding sex, its ironic that the world at large cant accept that intimacy cant occur outside of sexual desire. there is intimacy in a shared bath between a mother and her child. between brothers sharing a bed. between friends changing in the same room.

and i said white people bc i feel like literally everyone else figured that shit out already? like in public bath houses and women walking around with their breasts exposed. europe got a hold of chriatianity and decided to put a worldwide ban nakedness and put these restrictions on the human body, bastardizing the nature with which we come into the world. its dirty, its deviant, its dangerous to be exposed in the appropriate spaces or ones own home.

the way young people have to cover up in their homes before guests come, the way shorts and other summer clothes are only perceived as sexual in nature and not the most effective way of combating a million degree heat, the way people freak out when they see a bra strap like it wasnt them who made bitches wear bras in the first place

i think we should let bodies be bodies be bodies

I always think of one of my co-workers at a husky farm near Inari, who told me apropos of nothing while we were clearing out dog shit together that he thought the reason Americans are "like that" ("like what, Veikka" got the response "you know what I mean") is because "they never see their grandma's tits." His logic was that "in Finland, you go to the sauna with your grandma from when you're a baby, and you see her naked, and this is years and years before you ever see any porn, so you know before you see any of it that it's temporary and fake. And when you get a girlfriend later, you know it's only a matter of time before her tits look like that too, you accept this. And Americans don't know that! They don't! They look at porn, and then they get a wife, and then they're surprised and bitter when she gets old - it's true!"

Like, to be clear, I think Veikka's analysis might have been missing more than a bit of nuance, this is the same guy whose motto was "Driving 600km south to Rovaniemi to get therapy is expensive, chopping wood till you don't care about it anymore is free", but I do occasionally still look at some British or American take online and think to myself, in his voice, "they've never seen their grandma's tits"

Anonymous asked:

Ever wondered what is Tony's relationship with his in-laws. Because I'm pretty sure he has at least one still around (theory purely based on that line in The Avengers - "Call your mom. Can you bunk over?").

jen27ny answered:

Tbh, I haven't really thought a lot about it, because I always asumed her family is dead because of that line in IM1 "You are all I have, too.", but here is what I thought would happen:

For a long time, Tony doesn't consciously realizes she has a family because Pepper keeps a lot of stuff private during her time as PA. Sure, she takes her vacation days and goes on short trips, but how was he ever supposed to know that she was visiting her parents?

Which is why when she tells him she wants him to come with her for her next trip to finally introduce them, he just stares at her. "You have parents?"

"Of course, I had come from somewhere, didn't I? Or did you think I was just beamed into the SI lobby wearing a pencil skirt and stiletto high heels?"

".... kinda."

So, they make the trip to them, somewhere in the countryside, maybe on a farm, maybe not, there might be a lake, who knows, but they're definitely not living in a big city. Tony is nervous because, yeah, he's Tony Stark, billionaire, genius, superhero, and he doesn't care what people think about him - except these are his girlfriend's parents and her introducing him to them feels like a massive deal and JARVIS did some research that suggests he should leave a good impression.

He is prepared to bring out the big guns (aka his most charming smiles and best compliments and he even bought flowers for Mrs. Potts, which Pepper only commented on with a smirk), but he is not prepared for that bone-crushing hug he gets from Mrs. Potts who is talking so fast, only Luis from Ant-Man can keep up with her. Mr. Potts is a lot more silent, but with a wive like Mrs. Potts that isn't much of a surprise, but he has a firm handshake.

The only telephone they have is an ancient landline.

Tony's phone doesn't have any service and he might actually cries about it.

He expects them to grill them, but they don't, not really at least. Sure, they make a few comments about his past and the insane hours he made Pepper work (that's when he also realizes that Pepper hasn't told them everything of the crazy stuff, which he finds quite amusing), but it's more in a teasing that is all in the past now way.

Mrs. Potts doesn't stop talking, either about a cake recipe she found or about one of their neighbour's cats or that one time she was in that one city because Tony mentioned he was on a conference there once. Mrs. Potts also doesn't stop feeding Tony which he greatly enjoys. Mr. Potts and Tony bond over cars because Mr. Potts is into old cars and he even has one sitting in his garage.

Tony loves them. He tries to install more tech stuff into their home, because he feels quite weirded out by the lack of technology, but the couple always waves him off. However, they still call him at least once a week to ask him how to program the video recorder again. He has flowers send to Mrs. Potts on a regular basis and has a car magazine subscription in Mr. Potts' name.

And because I'm already way too deep down this rabbit hole: Let's imagine Pepper having a bigger family. Maybe not siblings but cousins and aunts and uncles and all that.

Much like Mrs. and Mr. Potts, they live out in the country side and are more the nature-kind-of-people than the technology-kind-of-people. There's a big dinner for Mrs. Potts' birthday (there's no number on the cake because a lady doesn't talk about her age), and it's, like, on a giant patio in the summer and they're having BBQ or something and every single table and chair in the house has been carried outside.

The kids are absolutely losing their minds over Iron Man being there, and Tony promises to stop by their birthday parties in his suit. Pepper's cousin (who is only a few years younger than Pepper) makes a joke about wanting Iron Man at their birthday party, too, so, naturally, Tony shows up to their birthday party, too. The rest of the Potts clan is just as loving as Pepper's parents, always sending him text or calling him, either to ask for his opinion ("Deborah, no, don't invest in those stocks, they will crash in burn in, like a week. I don't care what your work buddy Kevin said, Kevin doesn't know shit and is wrong. Now, grab a pen and write down which stocks you should actually invest in.") or to ask if he's okay after another Iron Man mission or just to chat.

One day, in the middle of signing some papers at their dinner table, Tony suddenly looks up at Pepper. "Oh my god."

"What is it?" She is quite concerned.

"You're the odd one."

"Excuse me?"

"In your family, you're the odd one. You're the black sheep of the family."

"That isn't true."

"Aw, honey, don't be embarrassed. I'm the black sheep of the family, too! We can bond over it!"

So, yeah, Tony loves his in-laws.

dapperworm Follow

Why would the Pentagon fund a movie?

imsobadatnicknames Follow

Literally most summer blockbusters are straight-up financed by the Pentagon. The Pentagon provides funding for movies but in exchange they demand to be allowed to make any edits they want to the script to ensure the U.S. military is depicted in a positive light and the movie can be used as tools for miltiary recruitment. It's called the Military Entertainment Complex (and it also involves the Pentagon funding videogames and music videos)

Basically, if a movie made in the U.S. contains ANY depction of the U.S. military, you can be 99% sure that it's at least partially a propagada piece commissioned by the Pentagon.

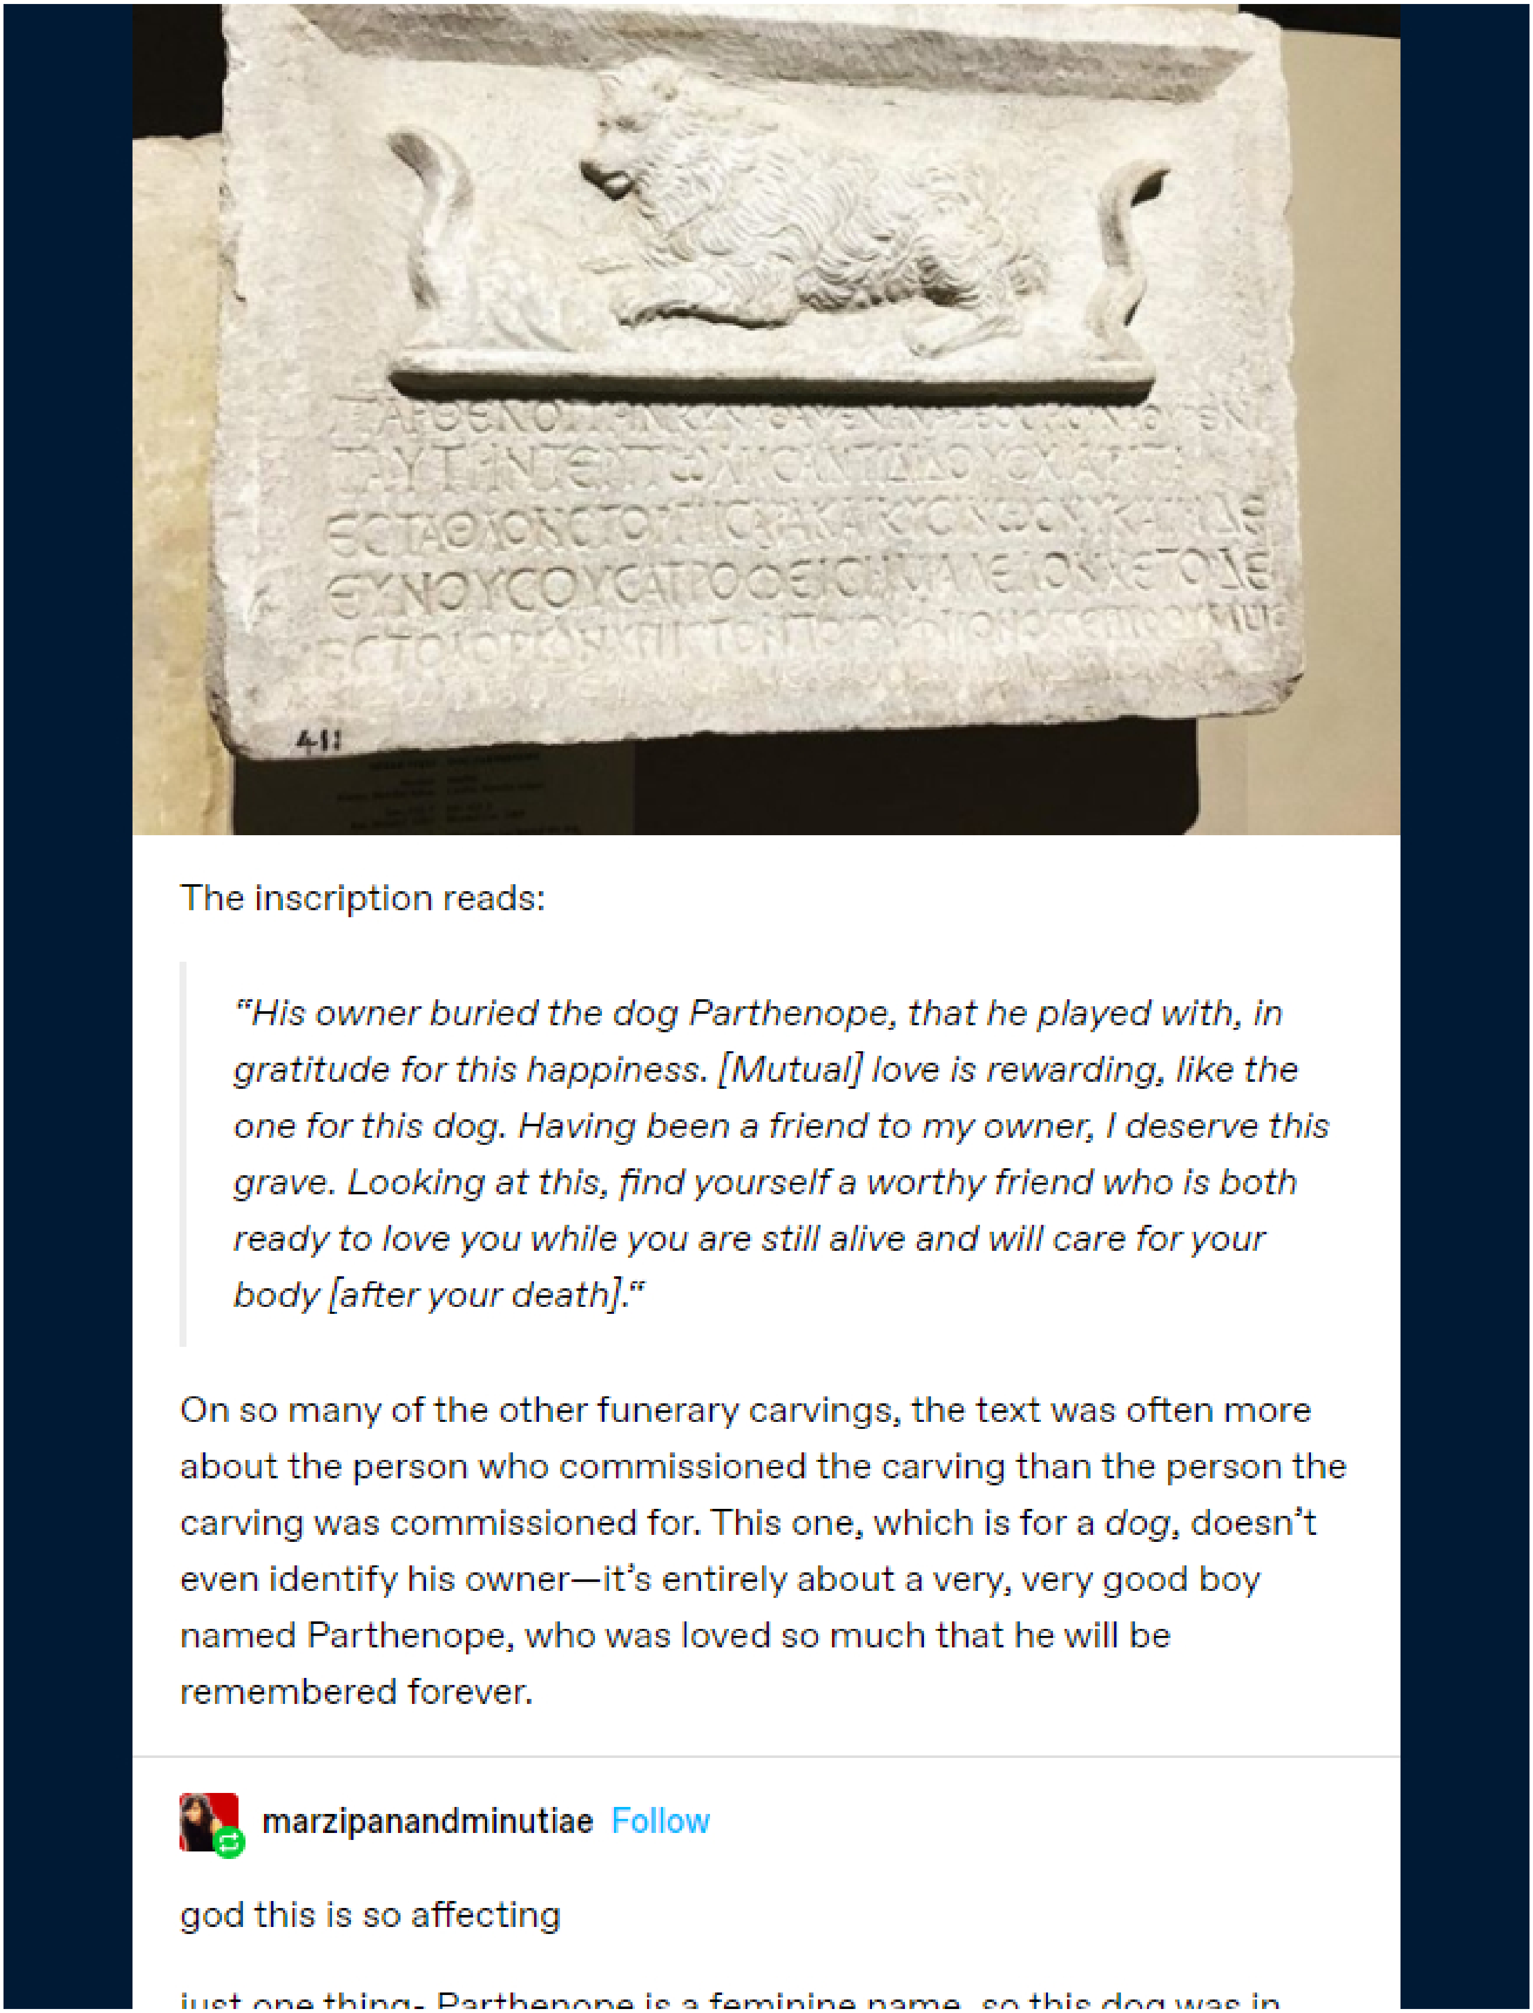
The ancient greeks really had graves for dogs. And they carved stuff on the stone like "carrying you here, I now feel as much grief as I felt joy when I carried you home" and "you never barked without reason, but now you are silent". The human urge to tell a story spans centuries and millennia, and the loss of a really good dog makes you want to tell people - even people centuries in the future, who will never know your name - that there once was a dog who was a very good girl, but now she no longer is and you aren't sure what to do with all this sorrow.

igetalongwithoutyouverywell

This is my very favourite thing.

Last year, I found this one tucked away in a corner of the archaeological museum in Istanbul:



The inscription reads:

> "His owner buried the dog Parthenope, that he played with, in gratitude for this happiness. [Mutual] love is rewarding, like the one for this dog. Having been a friend to my owner, I deserve this grave. Looking at this, find yourself a worthy friend who is both ready to love you while you are still alive and will care for your body [after your death]."

On so many of the other funerary carvings, the text was often more about the person who commissioned the carving than the person the carving was commissioned for. This one, which is for a dog, doesn't even identify his owner—it's entirely about a very, very good boy named Parthenope, who was loved so much that he will be remembered forever.

god this is so affecting just one thing- Parthenope is a feminine name, so this dog was in just one thing- Parthenope is a feminine name, so this dog was in fact a very, very good girl!

Remaining Assyrians in Northern Iraq
By Reza Deghati

In modern times, Assyrians have been doubly mistreate in Iraq. They have been victims of executions, forced displacement campaigns, torture, violence and target of Islamist groups like al-Qaeda and ISIS. Since the 2003 Iraq war, they have fled from the country and their population has collapsed under the Government of Iraq. Majority of them have either fled to Iraqi Kurdistan or abroad. However, they also face oppression in the Kurdistan Region. There is an ongoing Kurdish expropriation of Assyrian lands.

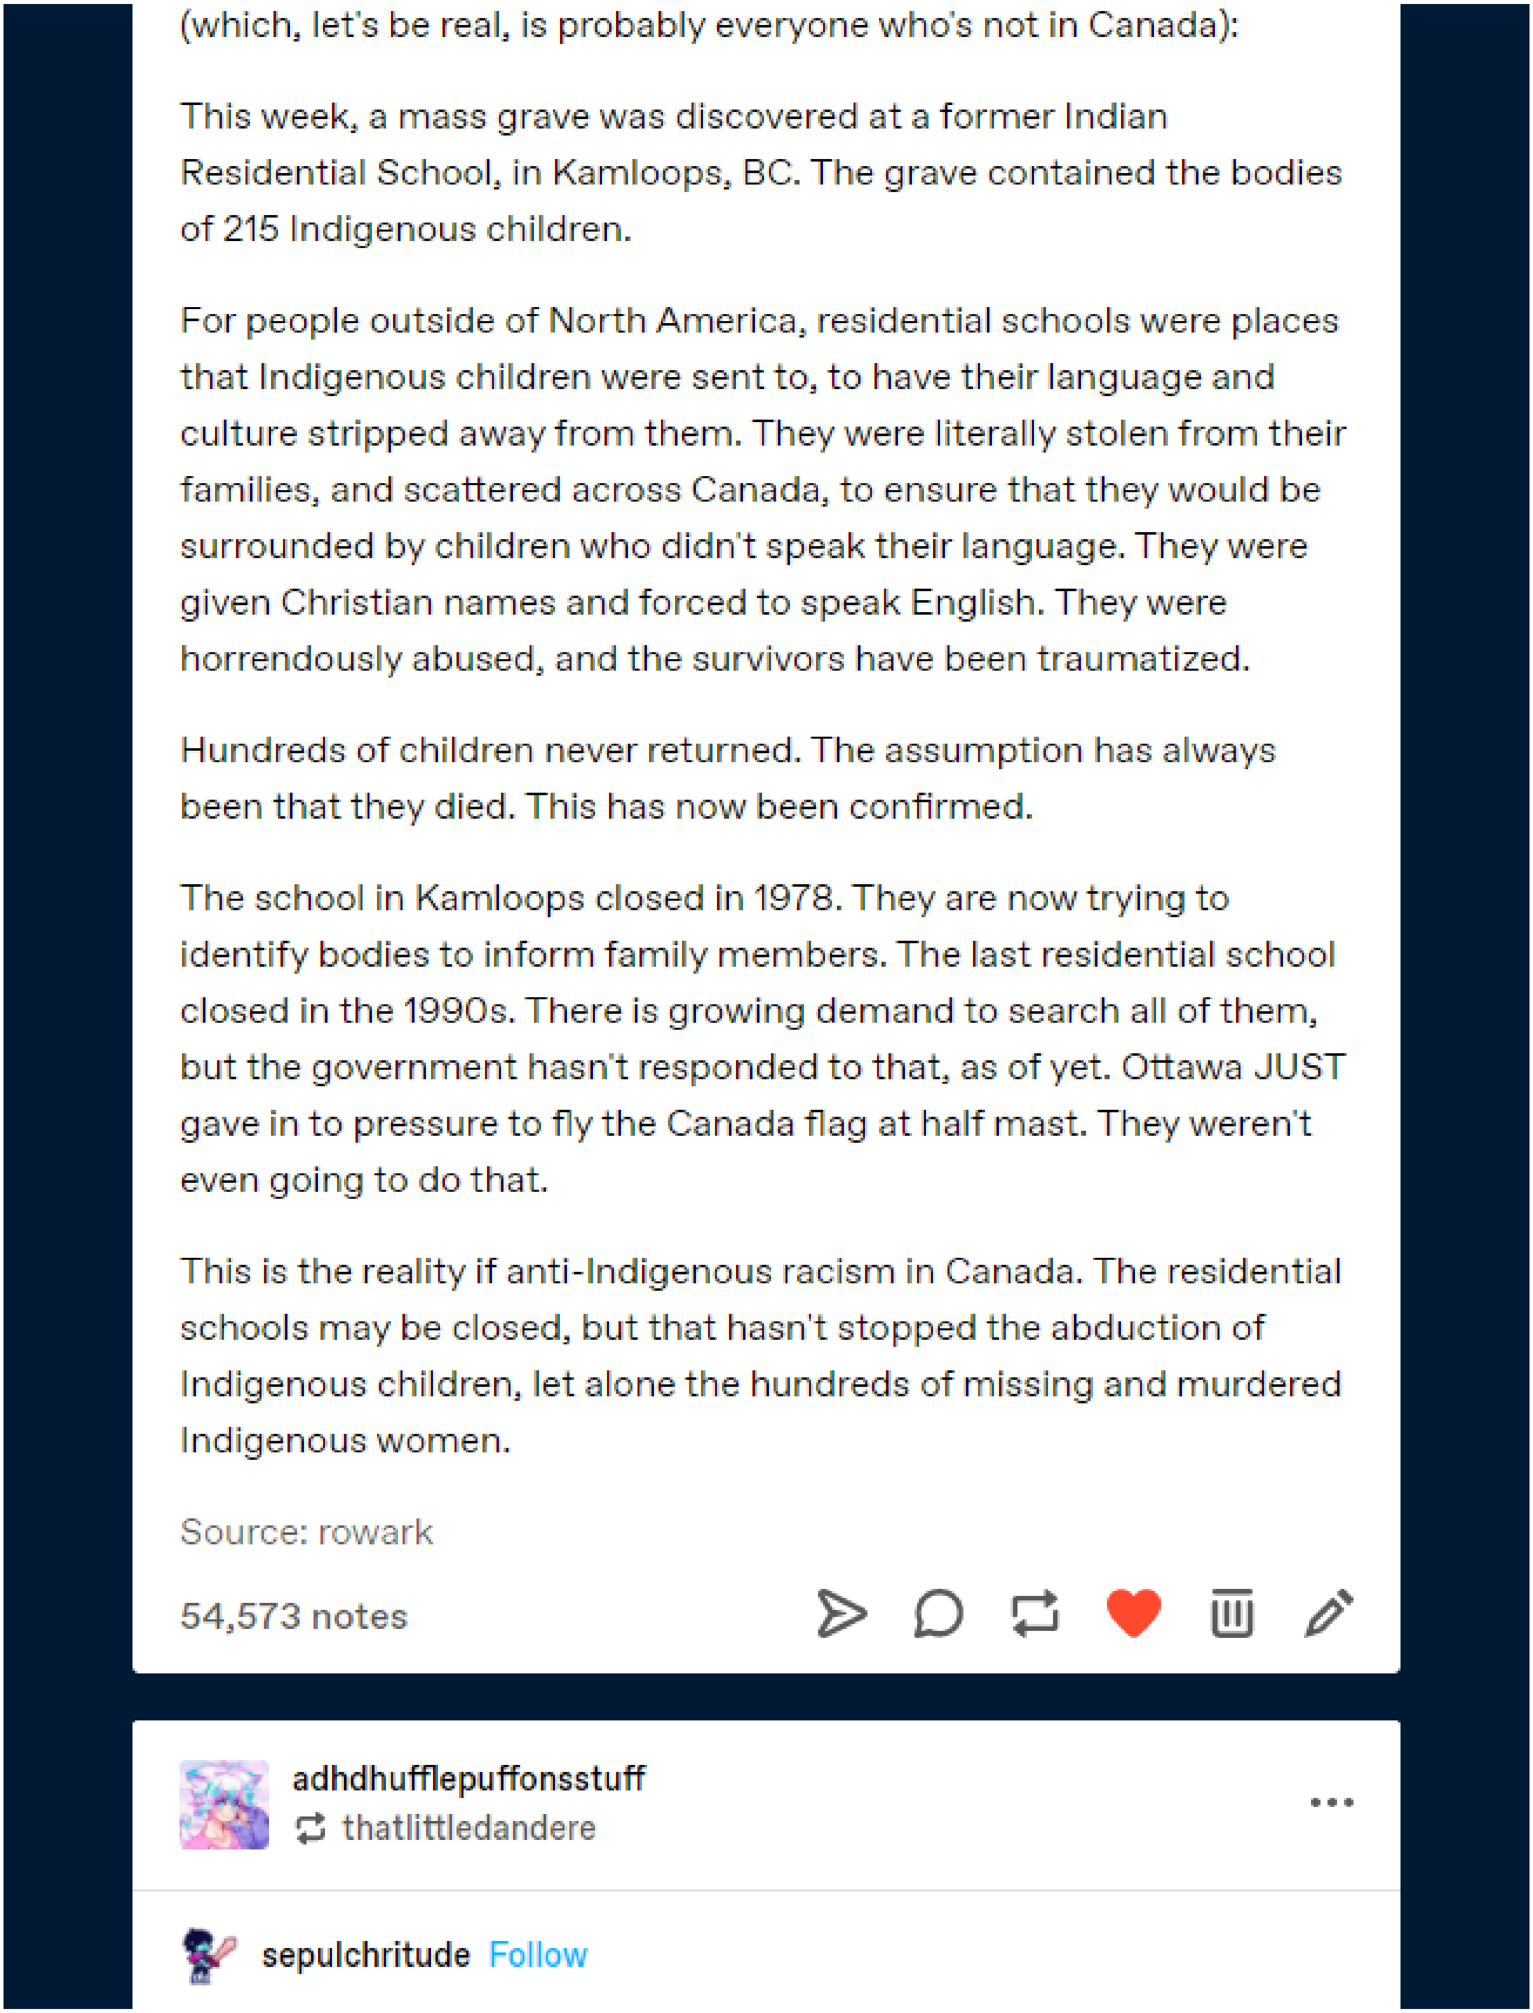
For anyone who doesn't know what's going on in Canada right now



(which, let's be real, is probably everyone who's not in Canada):

This week, a mass grave was discovered at a former Indian Residential School, in Kamloops, BC. The grave contained the bodies of 215 Indigenous children.

For people outside of North America, residential schools were places that Indigenous children were sent to, to have their language and culture stripped away from them. They were literally stolen from their families, and scattered across Canada, to ensure that they would be surrounded by children who didn't speak their language. They were given Christian names and forced to speak English. They were horrendously abused, and the survivors have been traumatized.

Hundreds of children never returned. The assumption has always been that they died. This has now been confirmed.

The school in Kamloops closed in 1978. They are now trying to identify bodies to inform family members. The last residential school closed in the 1990s. There is growing demand to search all of them, but the government hasn't responded to that, as of yet. Ottawa JUST gave in to pressure to fly the Canada flag at half mast. They weren't even going to do that.

This is the reality if anti-Indigenous racism in Canada. The residential schools may be closed, but that hasn't stopped the abduction of Indigenous children, let alone the hundreds of missing and murdered Indigenous women.

I've cracked the code. Next time you correct someone on your pronouns and they respond with that generally positive but slightly defensive vibe like "oh sorry, I'm new to this so it'll take me a while" just hit em with one of these:

"No worries, I'm practicing at reminding people and you seem like a safe person to practice with"

Boom. Took the perceived blame off their shoulders and made the connection for them that being corrected = being trusted. Rinse and repeat. It's also not a lie, correcting people on my pronouns is stressful and personally I really am super cautious about it

I figure some angry people will jump into the notes on this one so let me clarify: trans people do not have to be nice or coddle cis feelings. Some of us like living low-conflict lives though, so get off our dicks about it

sepulchritude Follow

Cis people if you would like to avoid having this interaction in the first place, try "thank you for correcting me"

bygodstillam Follow

"[correction]"

"oh right, thanks, [carries on whatever they were saying but with the correct pronouns this time]"

^That is the best way to handle it. Cis folks take notes.

That said, I deeply appreciate having a hack for if I correct someone irl and they make a thing out of it, so thank you OP you are a treasure for sharing this Cis Hack.

month and if I see any biphobia, I will throw hands

This includes, but is not limited to:

- saying that bisexuality excludes trans/nonbinary people (it doesn't)
- saying that bisexuality is too binary (it isn't)
- saying that bisexuality is outdated (again, it isn't)
- saying/implying that bisexuals only care about gender rather than personality (which is gross and untrue)
- derailing conversations on biphobia and its effects
- excluding bisexuals from mlm and wlw spaces/discussions
- speaking over bisexuals in conversations on the issues we face
- refusing to listen to bisexuals if we say something is biphobic
- ignoring bisexual history and activism
- ignoring the present contributions of bisexuals to LGBTQ culture
- making demeaning jokes about bisexuals or jokes that rely on negative stereotypes
- stereotyping bisexuals in general
- viewing bisexuals as 'half-straight'/'lesser' members of the LGBTQ community
- and finally, speaking over bisexuals about the very definition of bisexuality
- yes this includes saying things like 'that sounds more like [other sexuality]' or 'if you define your attraction that way you're [other sexuality] instead' in response to a bisexual person describing how they define their orientation for themself

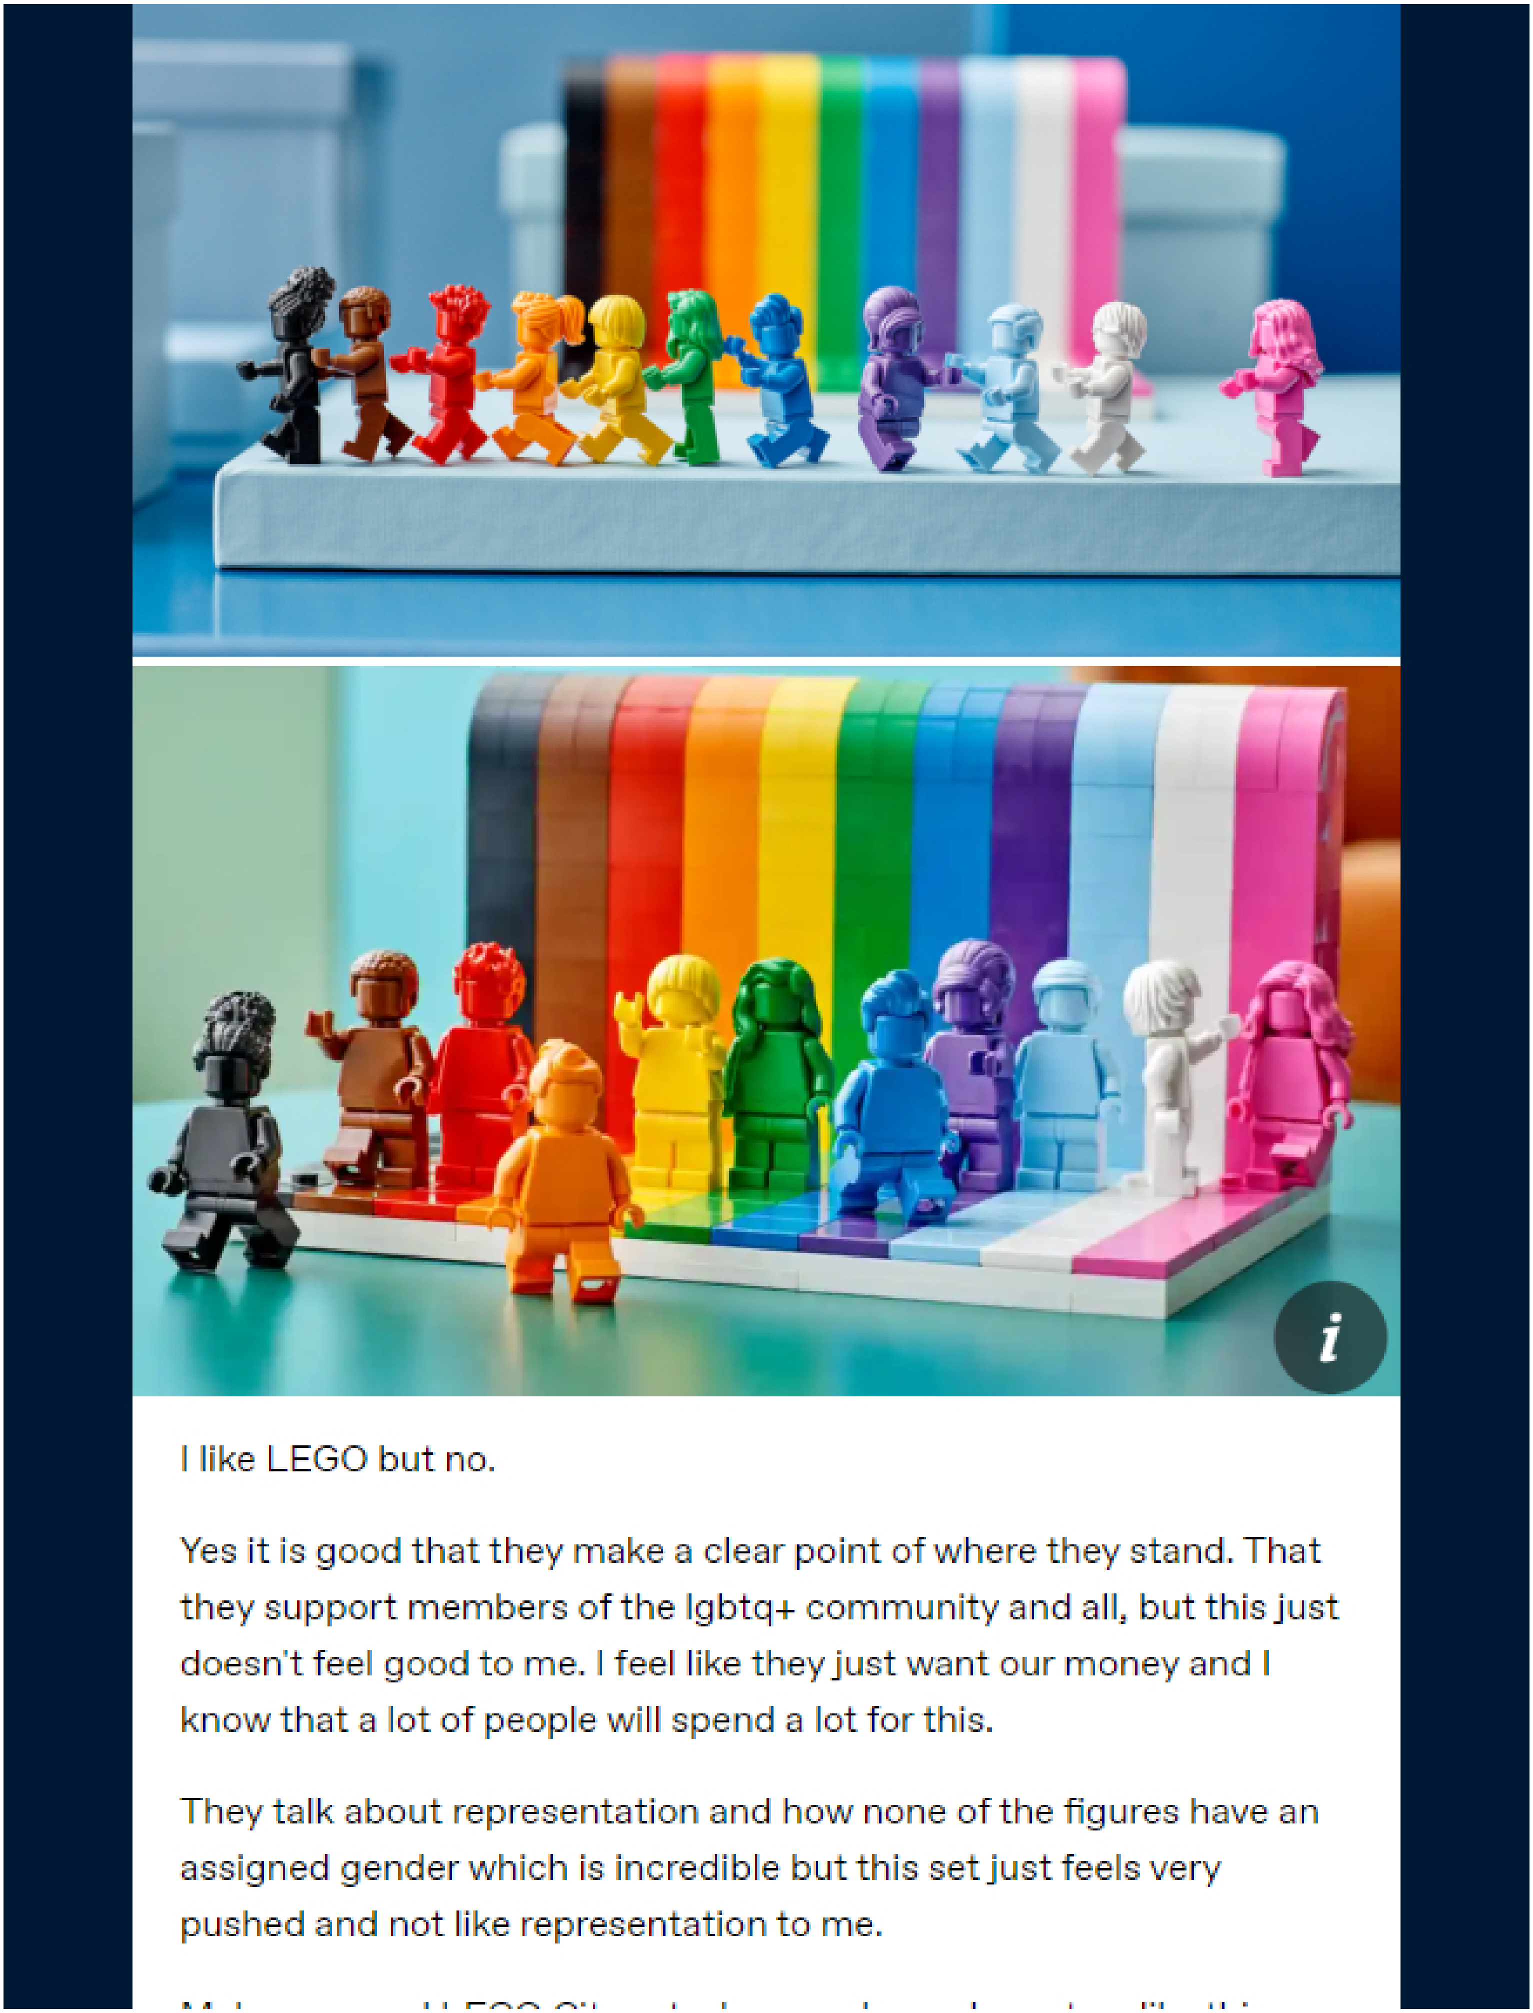
As pride month comes closer, companies all around the world want to show their support, but not without making money out of it.

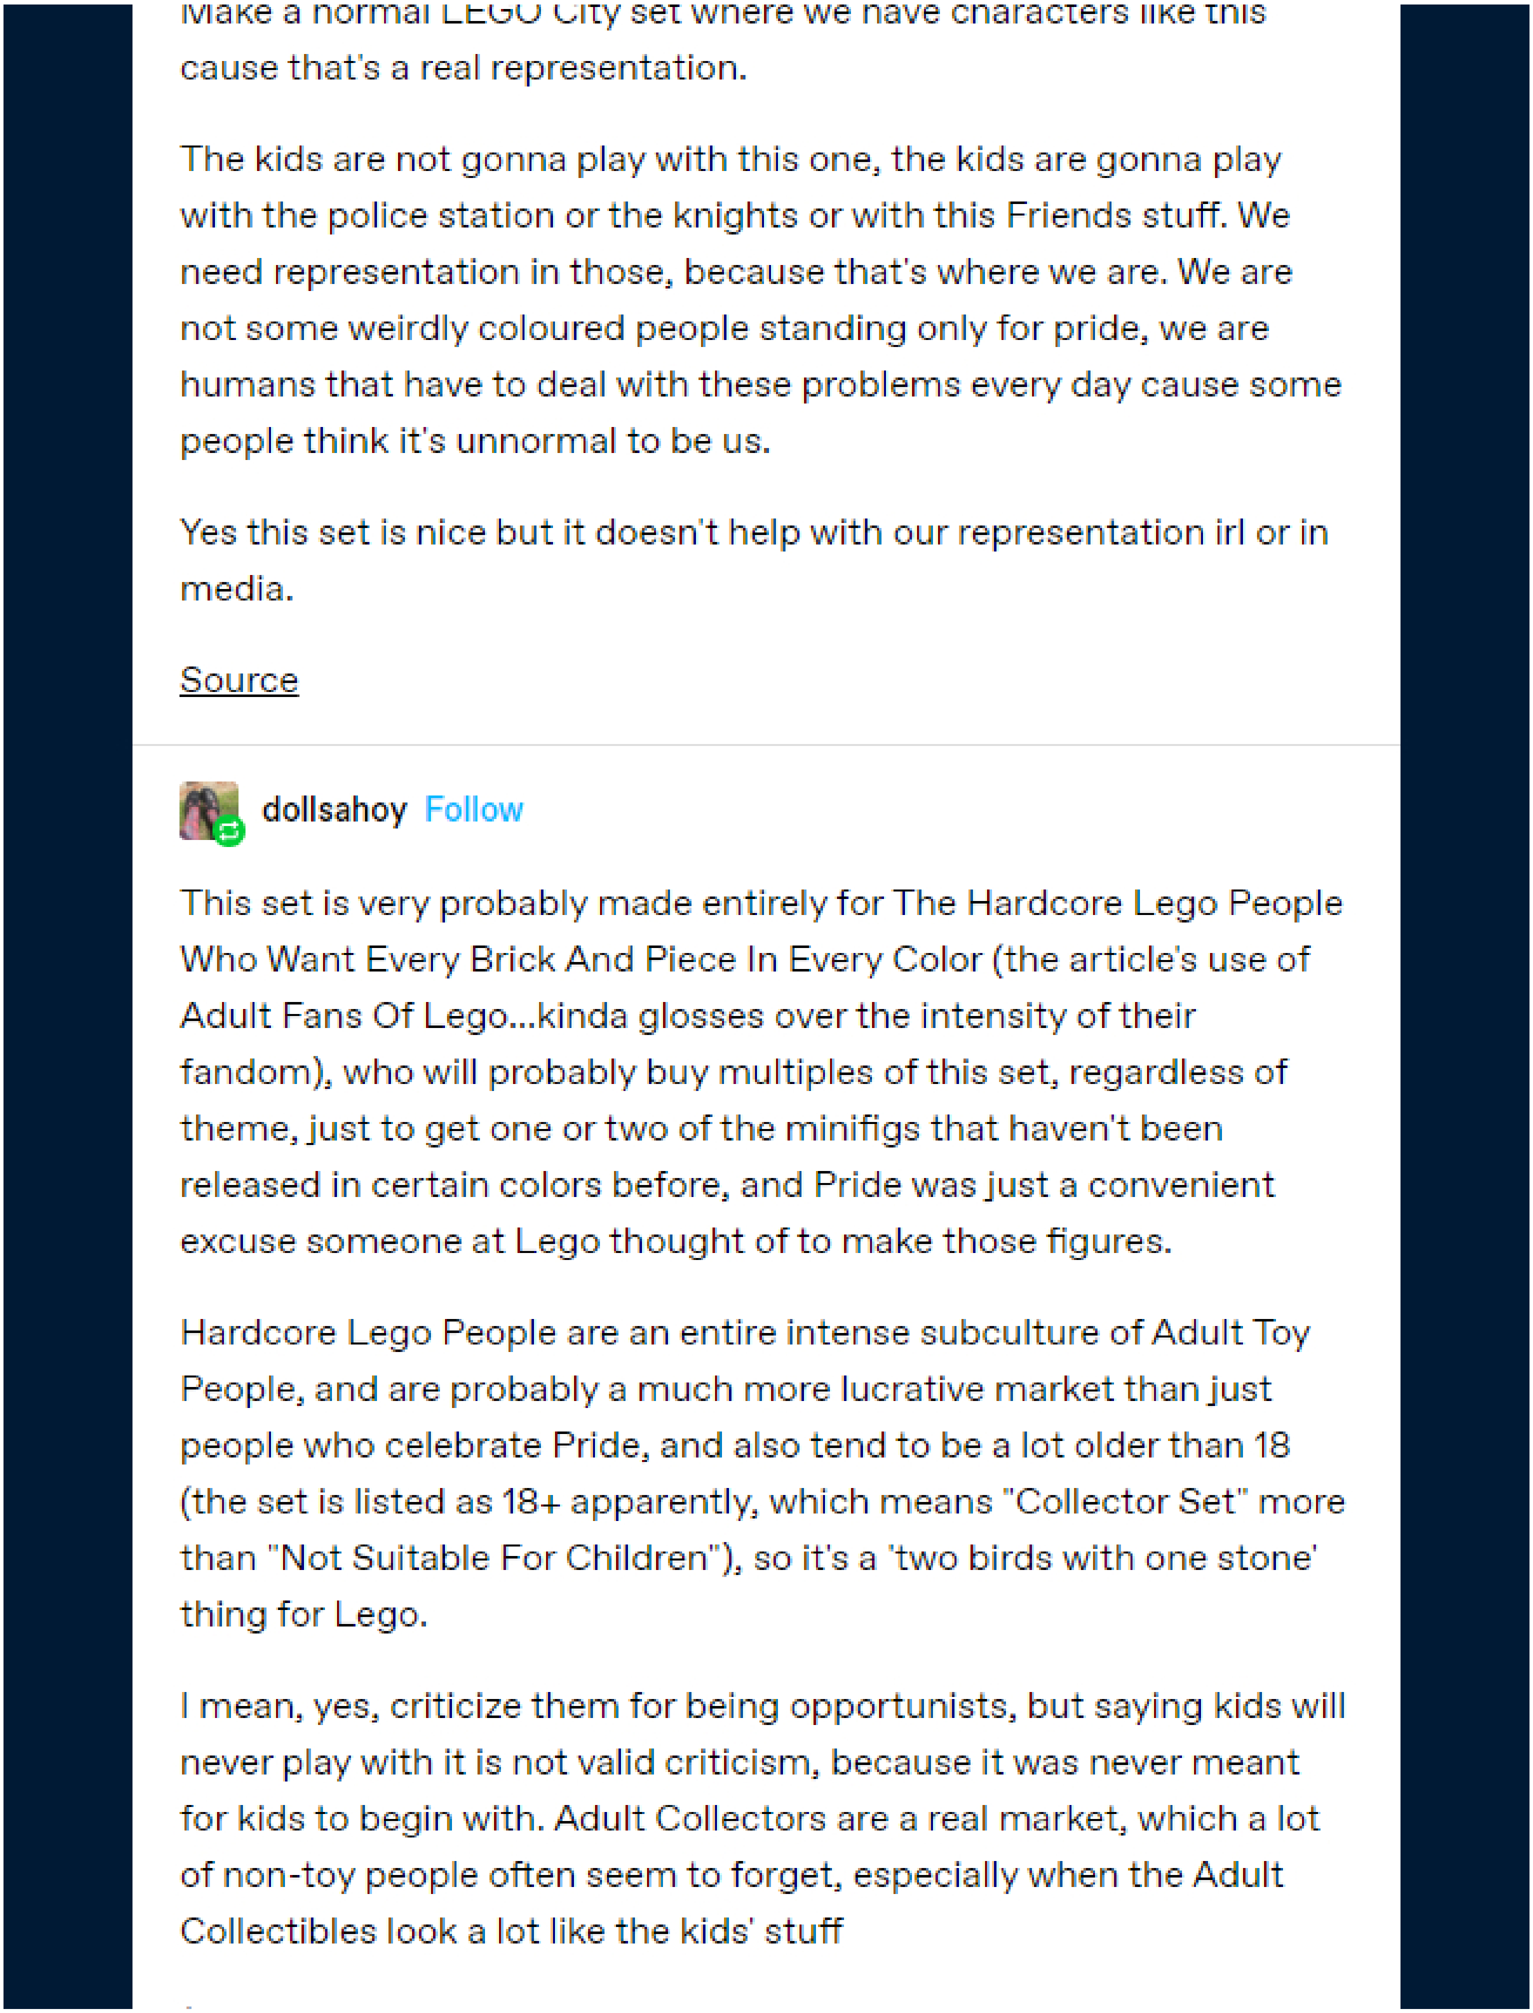
LEGO just launched a new LGBTQ+ Set



I like LEGO but no.

Yes it is good that they make a clear point of where they stand. That they support members of the lgbtq+ community and all, but this just doesn't feel good to me. I feel like they just want our money and I know that a lot of people will spend a lot for this.

They talk about representation and how none of the figures have an assigned gender which is incredible but this set just feels very pushed and not like representation to me.



Make a normal LEGO City set where we have characters like this cause that's a real representation.

The kids are not gonna play with this one, the kids are gonna play with the police station or the knights or with this Friends stuff. We need representation in those, because that's where we are. We are not some weirdly coloured people standing only for pride, we are humans that have to deal with these problems every day cause some people think it's unnormal to be us.

Yes this set is nice but it doesn't help with our representation irl or in media.

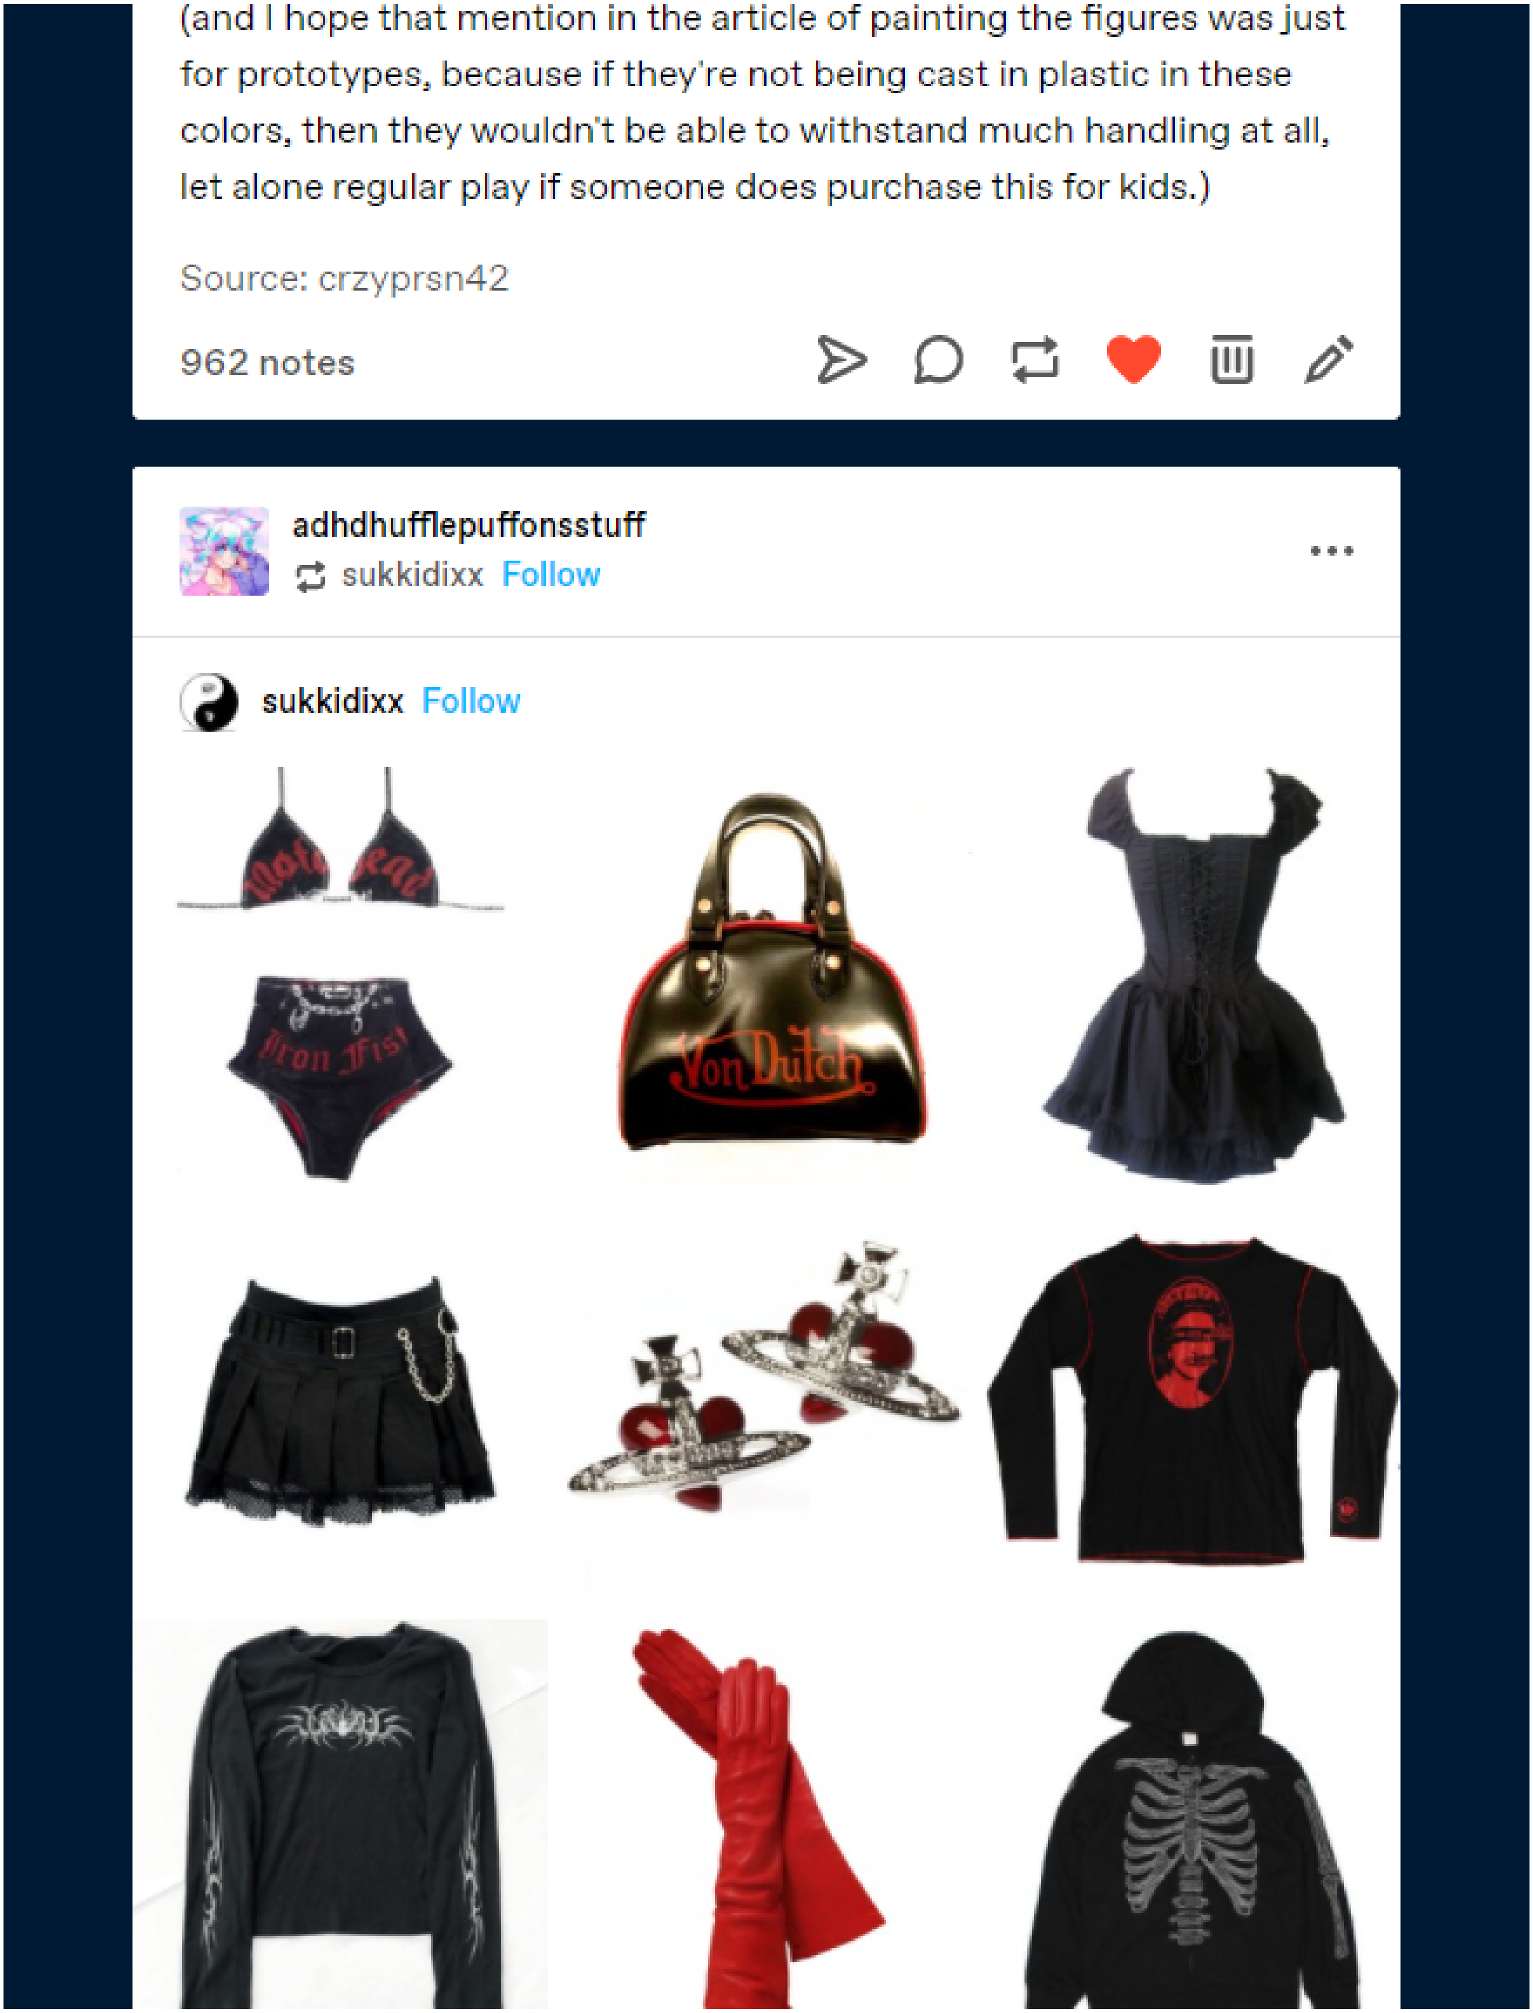
Source

dollsahoy Follow

This set is very probably made entirely for The Hardcore Lego People Who Want Every Brick And Piece In Every Color (the article's use of Adult Fans Of Lego...kinda glosses over the intensity of their fandom), who will probably buy multiples of this set, regardless of theme, just to get one or two of the minifigs that haven't been released in certain colors before, and Pride was just a convenient excuse someone at Lego thought of to make those figures.

Hardcore Lego People are an entire intense subculture of Adult Toy People, and are probably a much more lucrative market than just people who celebrate Pride, and also tend to be a lot older than 18 (the set is listed as 18+ apparently, which means "Collector Set" more than "Not Suitable For Children"), so it's a 'two birds with one stone' thing for Lego.

I mean, yes, criticize them for being opportunists, but saying kids will never play with it is not valid criticism, because it was never meant for kids to begin with. Adult Collectors are a real market, which a lot of non-toy people often seem to forget, especially when the Adult Collectibles look a lot like the kids' stuff



(and I hope that mention in the article of painting the figures was just for prototypes, because if they're not being cast in plastic in these colors, then they wouldn't be able to withstand much handling at all, let alone regular play if someone does purchase this for kids.)

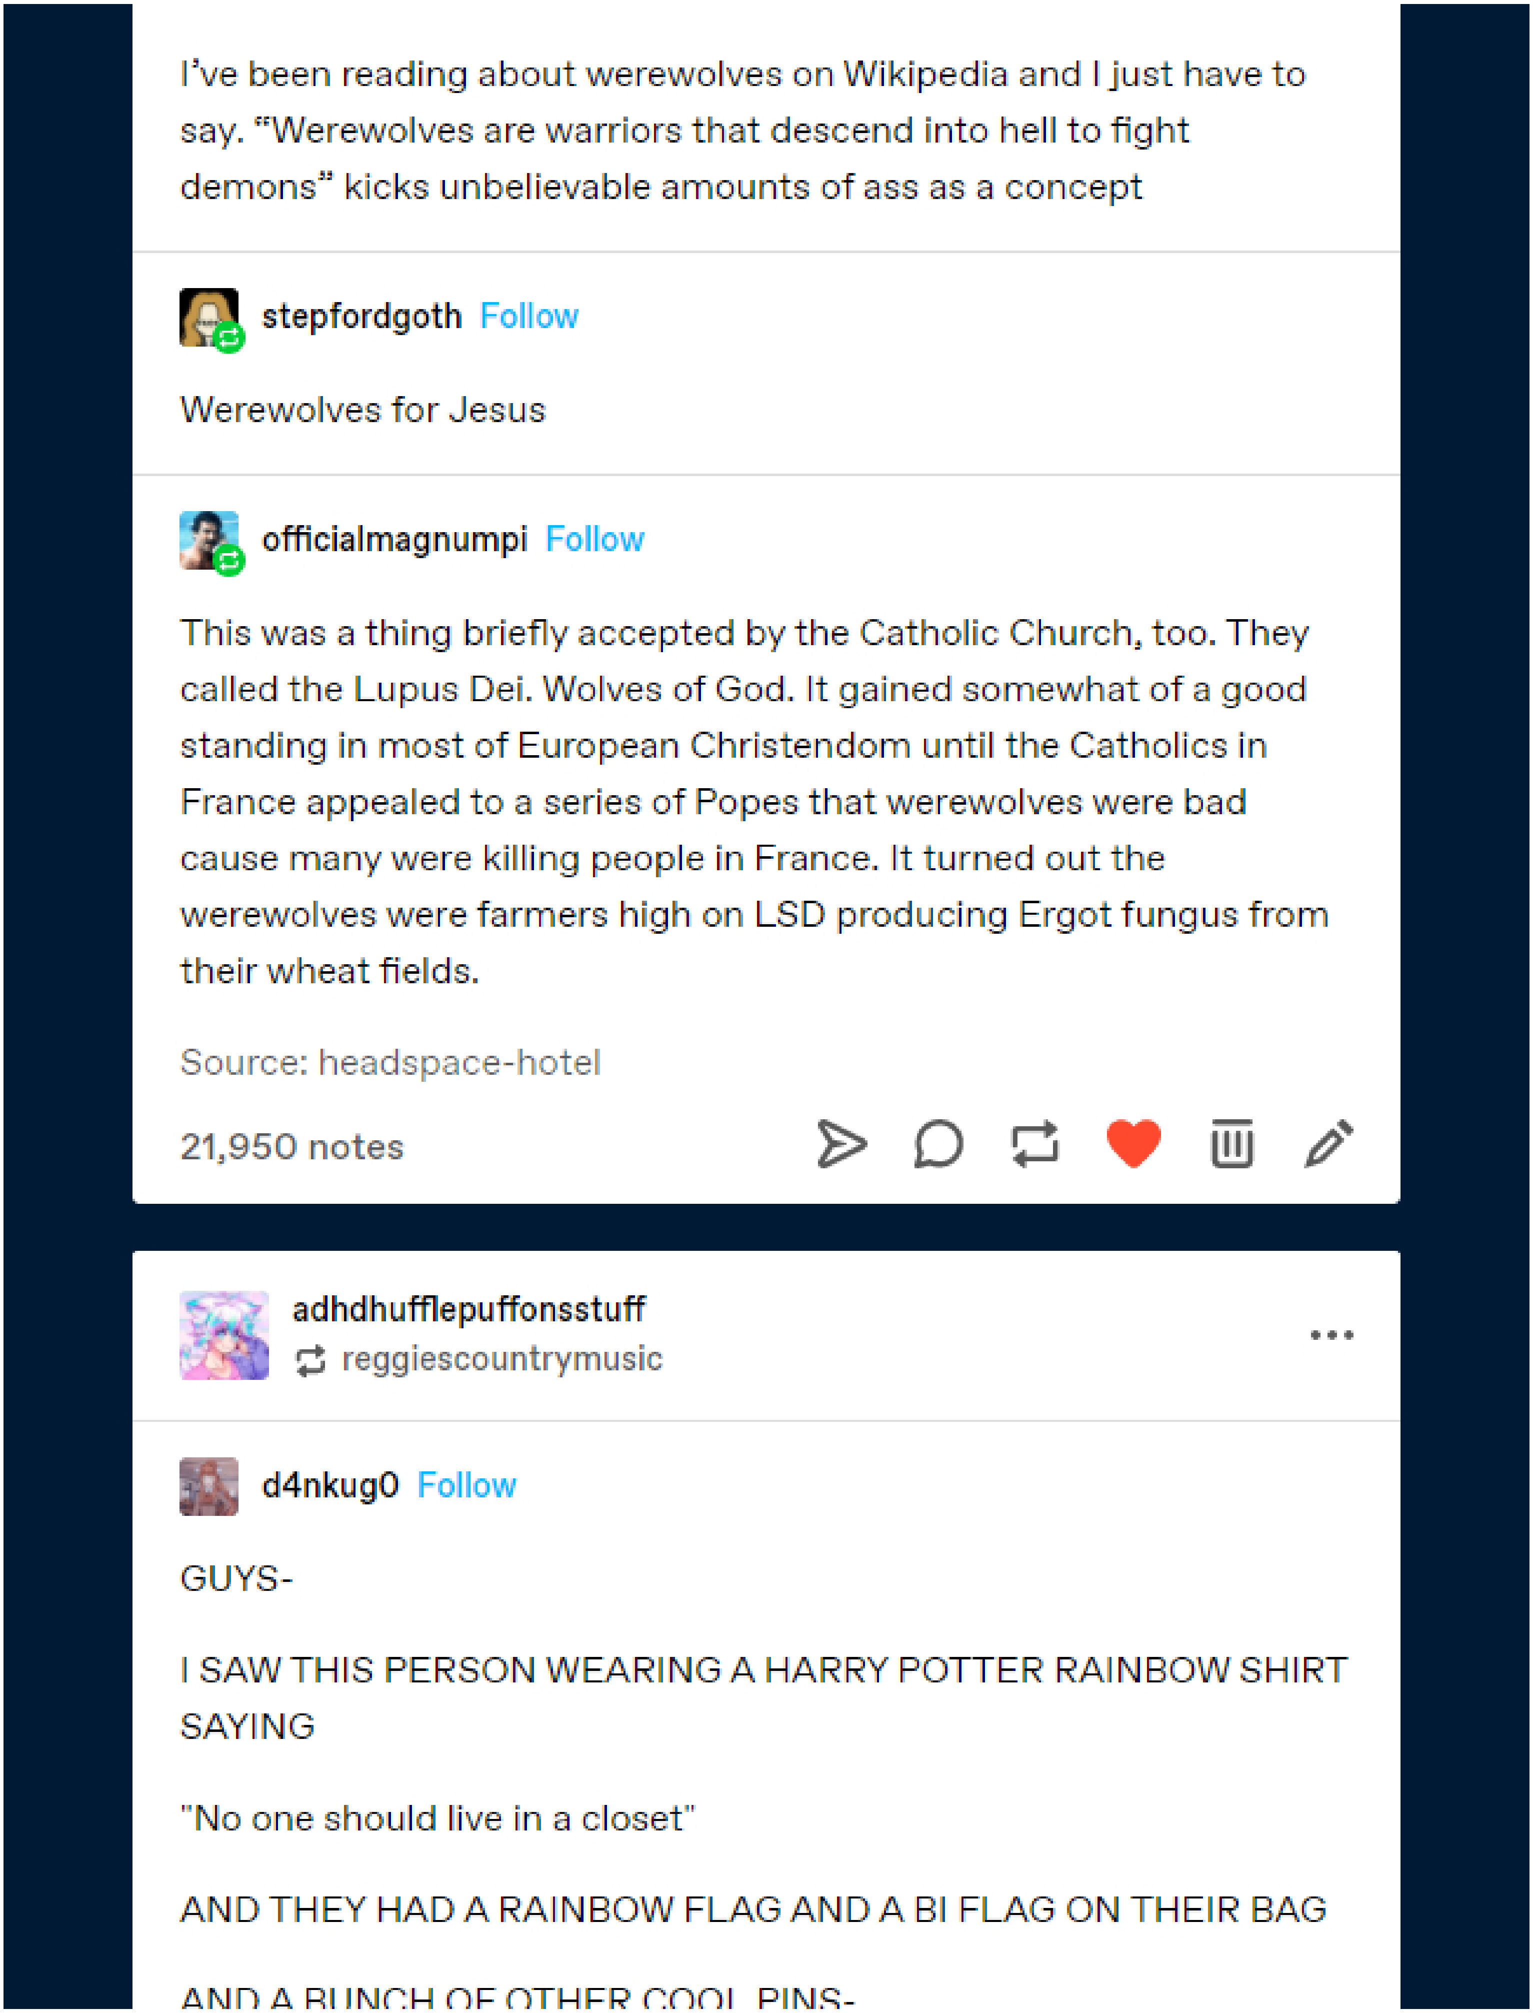
A notable exception to the association of Lycanthropy and the Devil, comes from a rare and lesser known account of an 80-year-old man named Thiess. In 1692, in Jürgensburg, Livonia, Thiess testified under oath that he and other werewolves were the Hounds of God.[48] He claimed they were warriors who went down into hell to do battle with witches and demons. Their efforts ensured that the Devil and his minions did not carry off the grain from local failed crops down to hell. Thiess was steadfast in his assertions, claiming that werewolves in Germany and Russia also did battle with the devil's minions in their own versions of hell, and insisted that when werewolves died, their souls were welcomed into heaven as reward for their service.



I've been reading about werewolves on Wikipedia and I just have to say. "Werewolves are warriors that descend into hell to fight demons" kicks unbelievable amounts of ass as a concept

Werewolves for Jesus

This was a thing briefly accepted by the Catholic Church, too. They called the Lupus Dei. Wolves of God. It gained somewhat of a good standing in most of European Christendom until the Catholics in France appealed to a series of Popes that werewolves were bad cause many were killing people in France. It turned out the werewolves were farmers high on LSD producing Ergot fungus from their wheat fields.

JACKIE MORRIS

From Acorn to Weasel: a gorgeous, hand-illustrated, large-format "spellbook" celebrating the magic and wonder of the natural world

The Lost Words began as a response to the removal of everyday nature words—among them "acorn," "bluebell," "kingfisher," and "wren"—from a widely used children's dictionary, because those words were not being used enough by children to merit inclusion.

But The Lost Words then grew to become a much broader protest at the loss of the natural world around us, as well as a celebration of the creatures and plants with which we share our lives, in all their characterful glory.

Educate yourself on residential schools and the generational trauma that we endure

Just PLEASE for the love of god talk about this.

We can't keep letting shit like this slide. That was only one school where they found those kids. Imagine how many more have mass graves on the premises. This isn't just "a dark chapter in our country's history" this was and still is the whole fucking book. There are people in my community who have lived through the horrors of residential schools and many more that live with the trauma it brought.

The link below me is a petition to call for a national day of mourning for the kids who didn't make it home to their families.

Please sign and share it. Remember these kids and the horrors they went through because we should NEVER forget this atrocity.

watched Cruella and i LOVED it. totally did not expect the story to take that turn. honestly it's fun and camp. like please ignore the people making memes about how it was supposed to be about cruella making revenge on dalmatians cause this movie is totally Not a Villain Backstory. it's self-contained and has influences of the original. think of it as an AU or Alternate Universe where Cruella is a glam-punk fashion designer with a hobby of doing heists. she has wicked tendencies, but she is not a bad person here. in fact, she's complex. it's just another take and it's great entertainment

Oh this is out!
Yes this is a real event we're collaborating with for Pride Month and if you have tickets PLEASE PLEASE PLEASE refrain from posting spoilers, or tag them at least!
Thank you and enjoy!

Disney Animation Promos @DisneyAPromos · 28. Mai

.@PaleyCenter will hold a free virtual screening event of the first two 'THE OWL HOUSE' season two episodes on June 5th due to Pride Month.

Unfortunately, tickets are now sold out.

Diesen Thread anzeigen

I don't know if anyone has posted about this yet, but just in case:

If you have a ticket, please refrain from posting spoilers until the episode actually airs. Don't ruin this for other people. And if you do post spoilers, which, again, I'd prefer it if you could just wait until everyone can see the episodes—please tag them appropriately, and add a spoiler slide on Instagram where you can't block tags.

If you don't have a ticket, this is your heads up to block #toh spoilers #the owl house spoilers #toh season two and maybe also just #toh and #the owl house altogether June 4 latest in order to avoid being spoiled!

«At the Internet Archive, this is how we digitize a book. We never destroy a book by cutting off its binding. Instead, we digitize it the hard way—one page at a time. We use the Scribe, a book scanner our engineers invented, along with the software that it runs. Our scanning centers are located in universities and libraries around the world, from Boston Public Library to the University of Toronto to the Wellcome Library and beyond. Eliza is one of our fastest and most accurate scanners. Next she will execute quality control checks and fix any errors. Then she ships the book back to our Physical Archive for long-term preservation. Now imagine this: scanners like Eliza have done this 2,000,000 times. That's what it takes to provide you with a free digital library.» – Plus Internet Archive's Modern Book Collection Now Tops 2 Million Volumes, by Chris Freeland, February 3, 2021

Those things are priceless, and I don't have the academic credentials to even make an appointment to see a manuscript like the Luttrell Psalter in person. But I can study it online to my heart's content, with greater magnification than i could get in person, and if that's not one of the greatest things about the internet, I don't know what is.

lit-beyond-measure asked:

picture the scene: everyone who died returns gradually. it's the knights first (in order of death, so lance would be first out of all of them), then gwen, then arthur bringing up the rear for a dramatic entrance

so when he arrives leon and merlin have helped the others adjust a little to modern life. one of the first things arthur notices is that percival is wearing sleeves and makes a remark about it taking death to get him to cover his biceps

however

percival just smirks at him

arthur goes oh fuck

percival holds out his arms to his sides and gwaine and elyan (standing on either side of him) fumble a bit around his shoulders and there's a sound that seems to arthur like snakes are hissing at him and then whoosh

with a dramatic flourish from elyan and gwaine, percival now stands sleeveless merlin saw a pair of these and decided to transform it into a shirt for percival for the sole purpose of winding arthur up (because they all knew he would be returning) percival has not changed out of that shirt for three weeks because arthur hadn't called ahead to say when he'd be arriving but the look on his face was absolutely worth it this is a really random ask but i was just putting away a pair of similar zip-off trousers and immediately thought of percival fucking with arthur and that being arthur's first experience of the modern world donttouchtheneednoggle answered:

🤣🤣🤣🤣🤣 CACKLING

Literally their first interaction with Arthur is to bully him? Iconic. And with fucking zIP AWAY SLEEVES 🤣 dramatic gays do not do things by halves

If I were Arthur and the first thing I was met with was Percival wearing sleeves I would turn around and walk right back into the lake RIP to him but I'm different 🙄

Ah the modern world would give them just. so many opportunities to torment Arthur :')

This is beautiful I thank you ❤❤❤

Anonymous asked:

hey what's up how are you what's your favorite chocolate truestoriesaboutme answered:

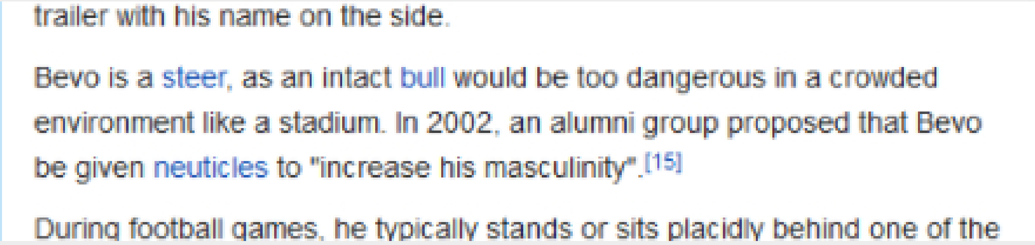
So...when I was in college, there was this double tiered meal plan system that I think is common in a lot of college meal plans. On the first tier, you were given $1,200 in Dine In Dollars that you could spend on any food or groceries that were sold by the school itself in the dining halls or little corner store type places in the dorms.

But also you were given $300 in something called Bevo Bucks (they were called that because I went to that school in texas, the big one whose mascot is a big boy cow with the big boy horns named Bevo, like "beeve" which is apparently another word for beef--but also really quickly before we continue, I need to show you something I saw just now from the actual wikipedia article on Bevo the Longhorn mascot because it's absolutely buckwild:



trailer with his name on the side.

Bevo is a steer, as an intact bull would be too dangerous in a crowded environment like a stadium. In 2002, an alumni group proposed that Bevo be given neuticles to "increase his masculinity".[15]

During football games, he typically stands or sits placidly behind one of the cishet dudes what the fuck is wrong with you?--anyway that's why they were called Bevo Bucks I'm gonna get out of this parenthetical now thanks for following me). Bevo Bucks you could spend at other third party restaurants and stores that had partnered with a college, mostly fast food places.

Every year, I'd run out of the Bevo Bucks in like a month because I eat like a cannibalistic garbage monster who can only eat other garbage but I was relatively slow to spend my dine in dollars because I hated all the dining hall food and I didn't buy a ton of groceries on account of I sort of lived a spartan existence of self-deprivation because I felt super lonely all the time and only had three friends: 1) Depression, 2) Gender Dysphoria, and 3) Luis. (Luis went to another school and was super into Ayn Rand. Like, "printed out John Galt's whole ass Atlas Shrugged speech in printer paper and taped it to the wall" level into Ayn Rand. But I don't have time to get into that right now. It was college.)

So I actually graduated a semester early because I had had a bunch of AP credits going into college and I was practically a sophomore when I started and, the thing was, my original plan had been to spend my last semester doing this program where you do a semester in LA and then sorta transition into doing film work. But then when the time came, it was too expensive and the family couldn't afford it and I didn't have any money so I just said fuck it and graduated early. (it's fine. I finally moved here a decade later, so...I made it??). (Also, another fun college story: when I graduated, I walked in the much more minor December graduation which was not attended by any single person who knew me. My mom was in the hospital because she'd had a minor breakdown. My dad was quadriplegic and couldn't come. He did try to watch a stream, but only realized too late that he'd actually been watching one from a different year. (I swear this is true). Luis asked if I wanted him to come and I said he didn't have to so he didn't.)

But anyway, when it was time to go, I realized that not only had I not spent all my Dine in Dollars for that year, but somehow they had been rolling over and so now I had entirely too much money that I had paid for that was suddenly about to become useless to me. So I went to one of the stores to do a sort of supermarket sweep. But it was like trying to do a supermarket sweep at a 7-11! What am I supposed to do? Buy Longhorn swag? Or $60 worth of dryer sheets? (fuck I maybe shoulda done that one).

So I'm wandering the place, trying to figure out what I want to buy, and I come across these fuckers:

MILK
ORGANIC
Milk Chocolate

Here's the thing: I really like high quality chocolate. If there's one thing that I'm consistently bougie about, it's chocolate because I'd rather not eat chocolate at all than eat bad chocolate. And this is a really good bar of milk chocolate because it's still like 36% cocoa. But I don't buy it all the time because it's expensive. But then, here I am, about to leave this era of my life for good, an era that had ended with a whimper and began with a whimper and was mostly whimper in the middle too, and I spent this money already so I'll be damned if I'm not gonna buy as much of this fucking chocolate that they have in this little store because why the fuck not? I cleared them the fuck out.

And I think about that whenever I buy it now. It feels like a little pyrrhic victory, but still a satisfying one.

Oh and Luis bought like a $100 worth of coffee

Can you explain how crackers are made?

demondaze

First the cracker batter baker bakes a cracker batter batch, then the cracker batter mixer door will open and unlatch so the batter mixer nozzle can descend onto the patch where the cracker batter spreads out for the nozzle to attach.

When the cracker mixer nozzle sprays the cracker batter spray and the cracker batch emulsion lies a-soaking in its haze then the cracker batter mixer starts to stir up all the glaze that the final cracker stacker needs to lubricate the way.

Once the cracker stacker handle stacks the cracker batter squares then the cracker batter's hardened into double stacks of pairs.
Now the cracker separator breaks the crackers in the stackers so the wrappers on the stackers fit the finished stacking crackers.

Then they're distributed to Wal-Mart.

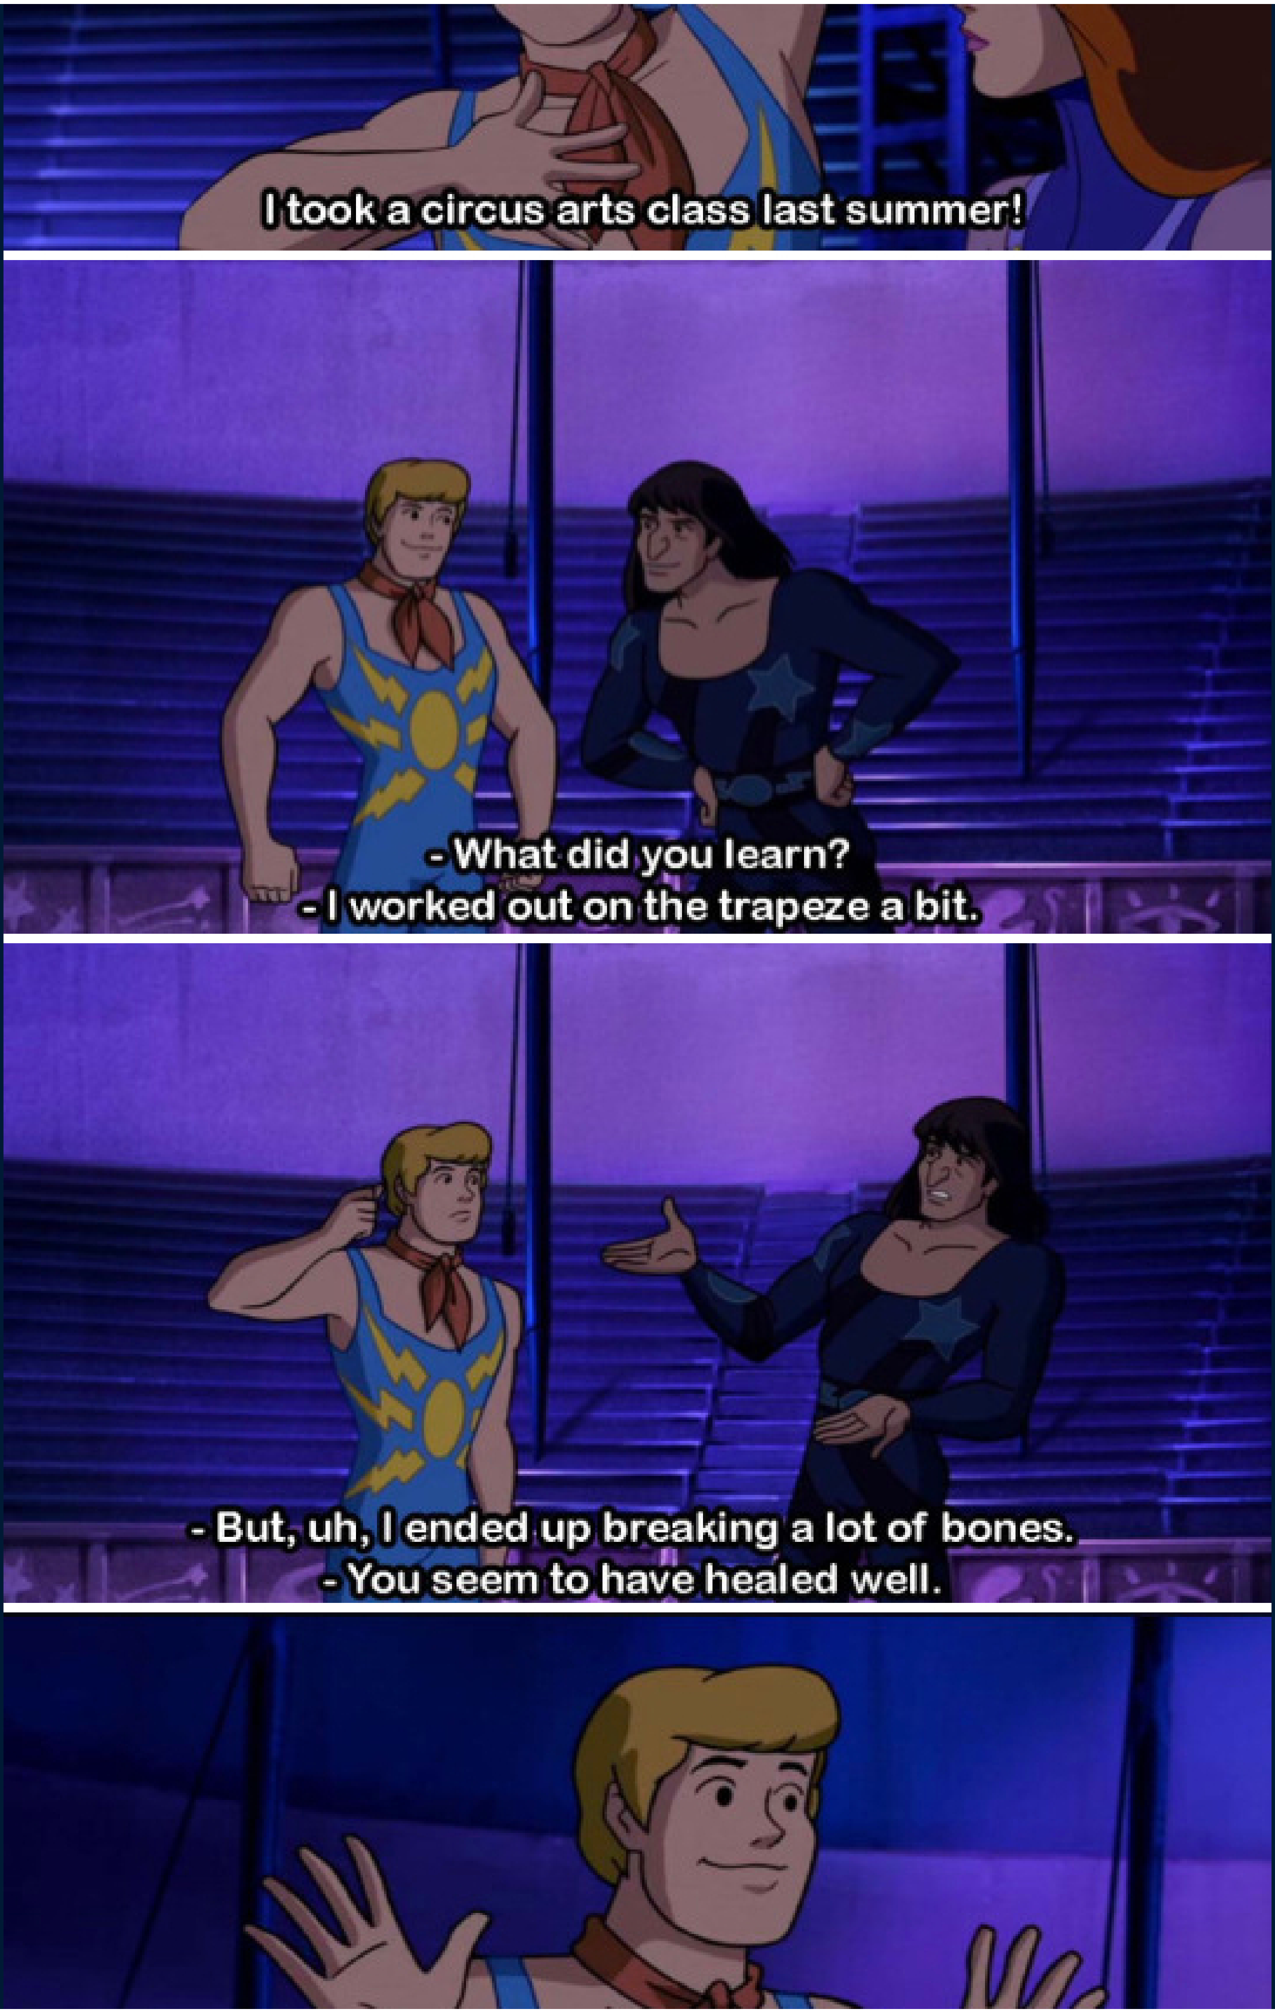
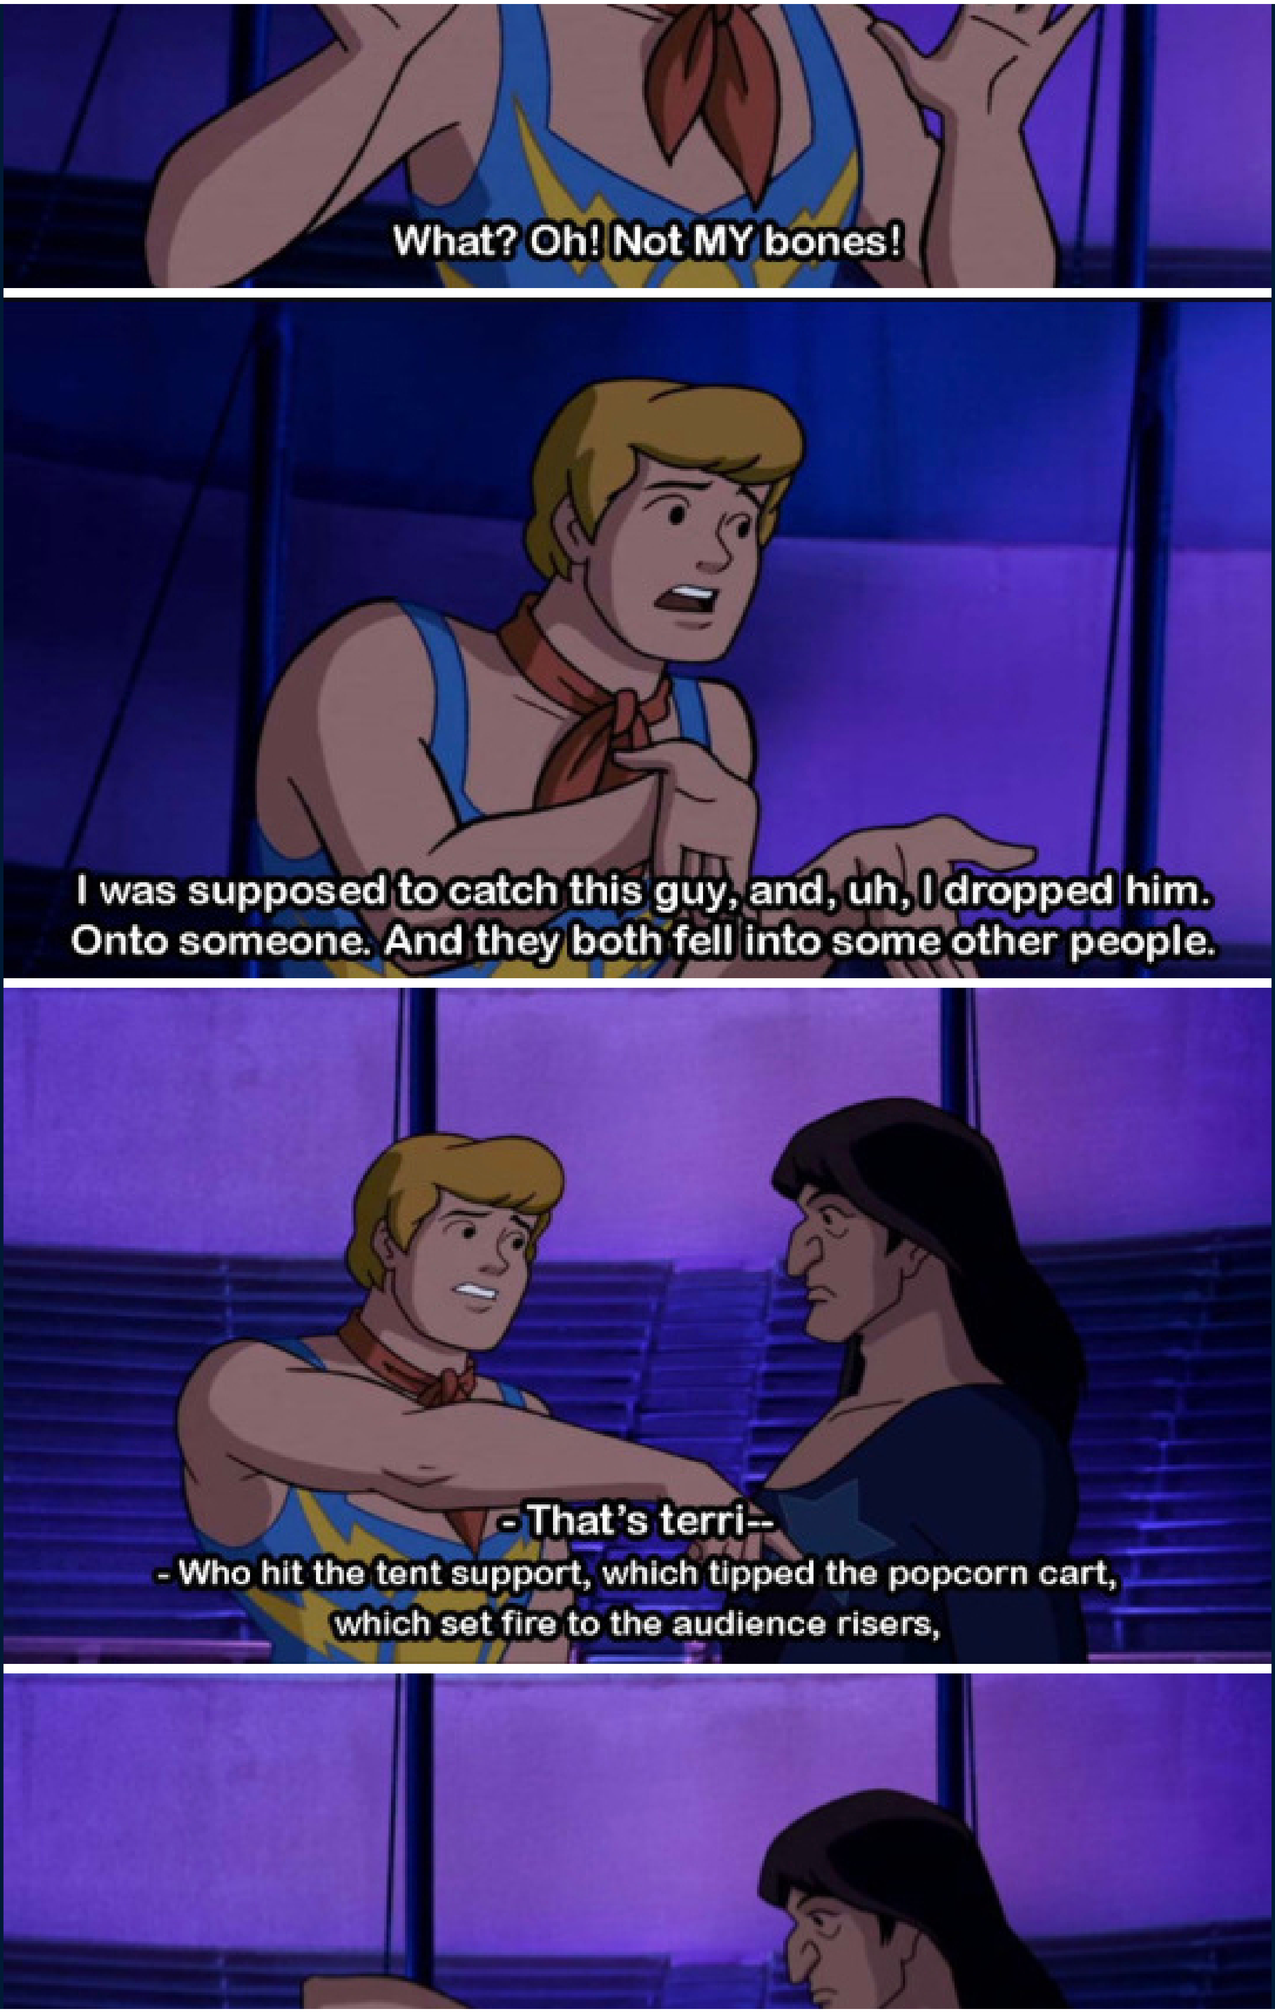
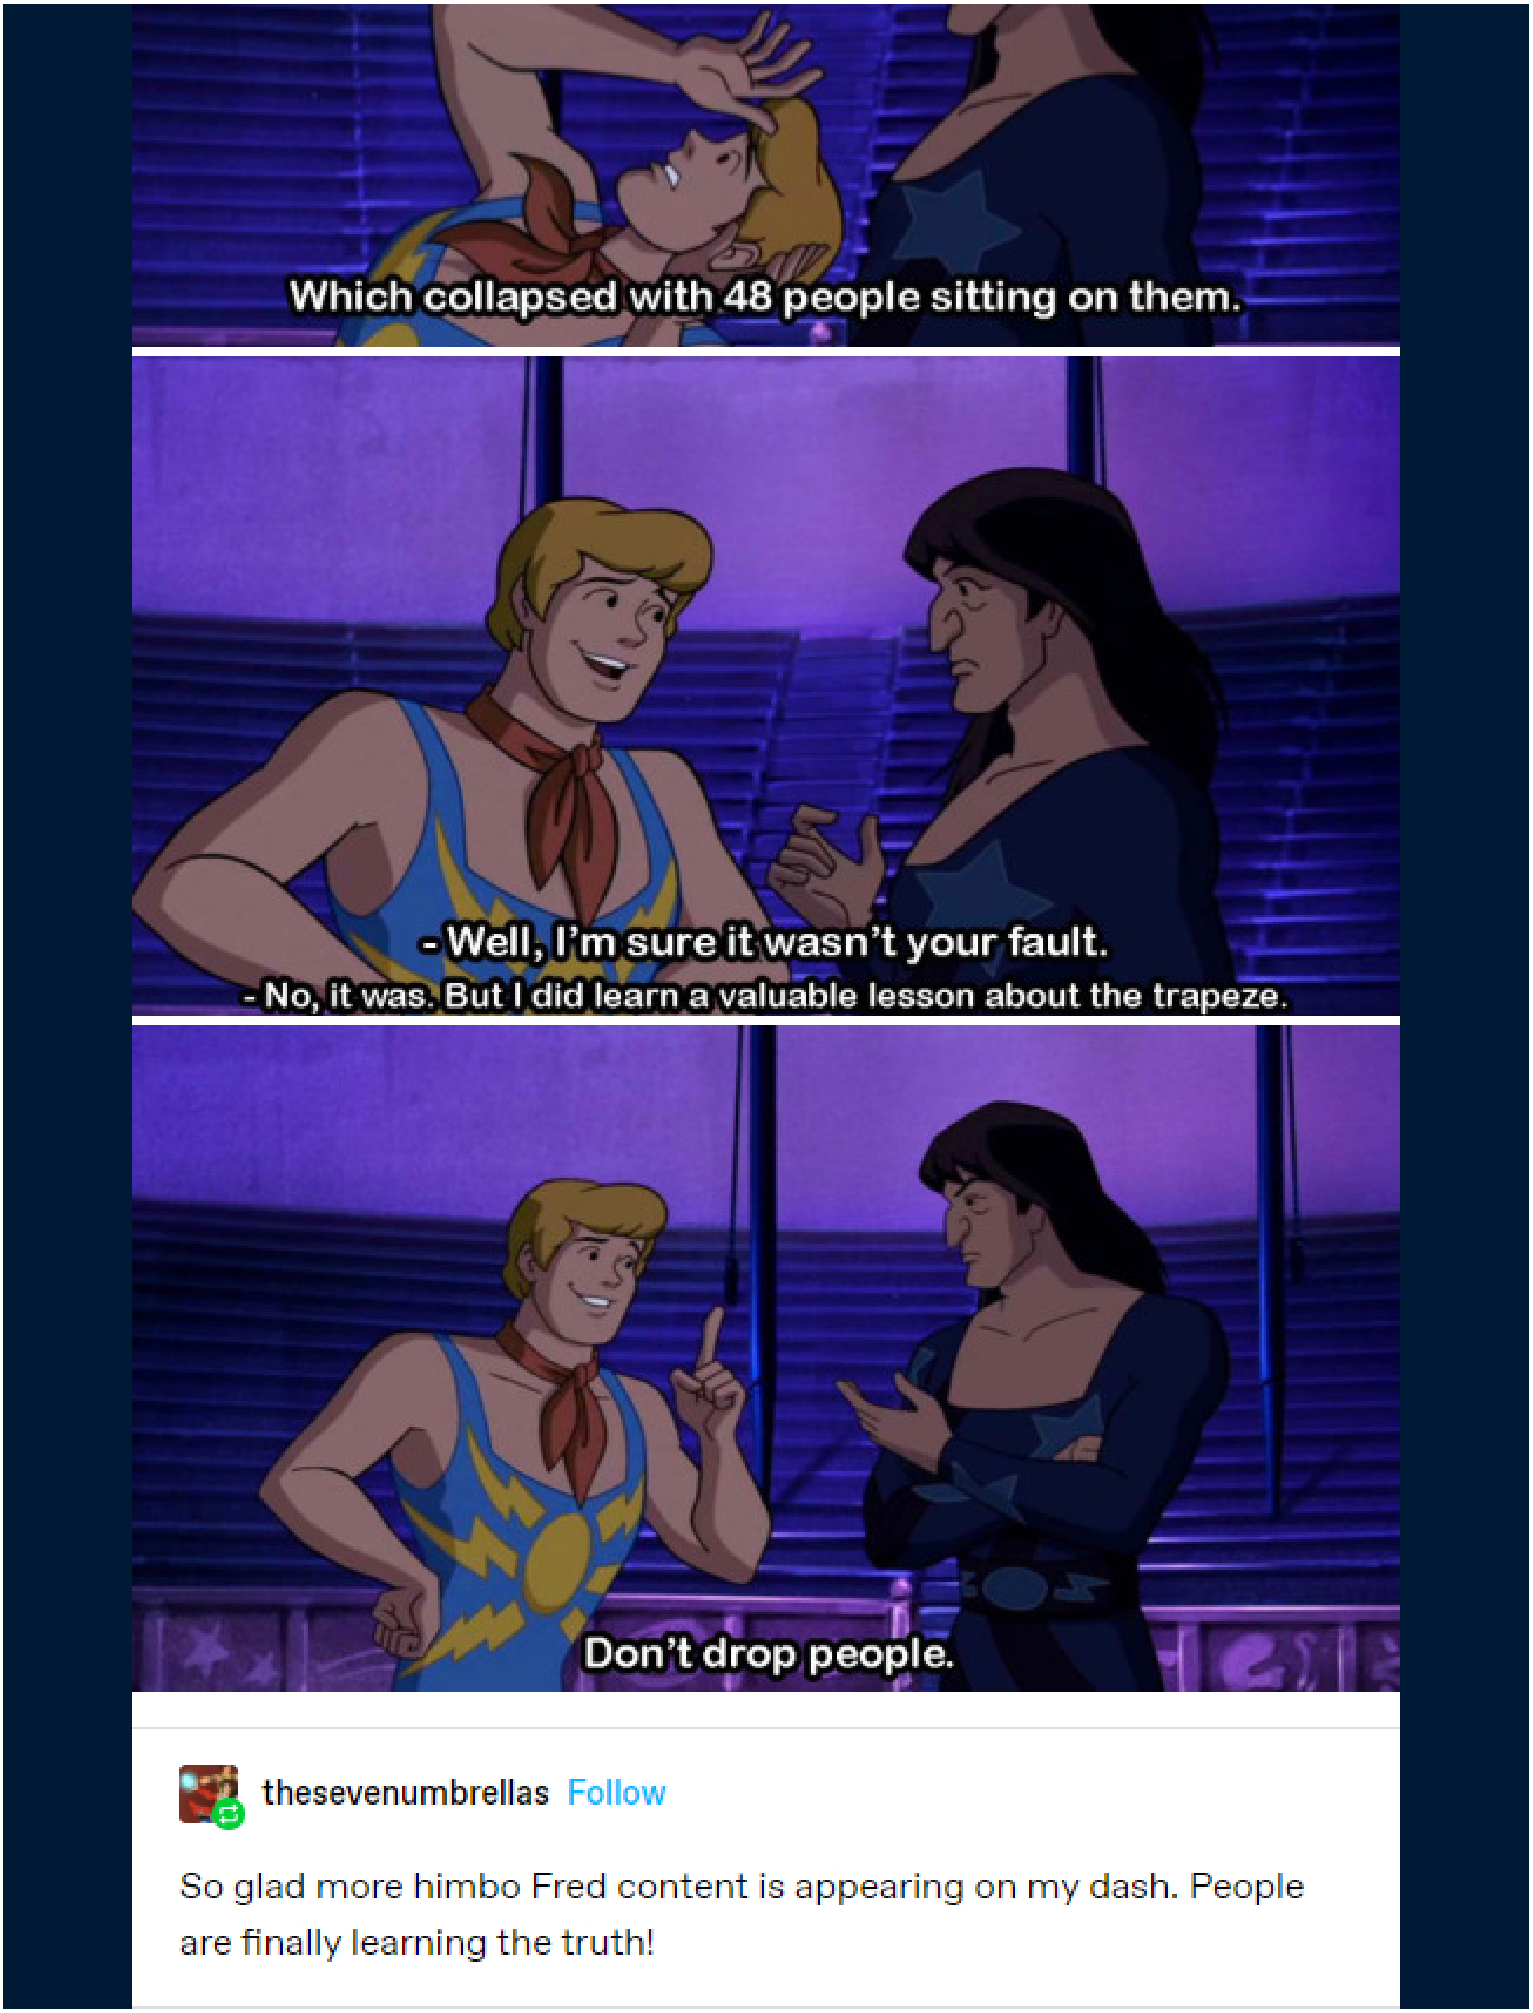
So. Do any of you have circus skills?



I took a circus arts class last summer!
- What did you learn?
- I worked out on the trapeze a bit.
- But, uh, I ended up breaking a lot of bones.
- You seem to have healed well.



What? Oh! Not MY bones!
I was supposed to catch this guy, and, uh, I dropped him. Onto someone. And they both fell into some other people.
- That's terri--
- Who hit the tent support, which tipped the popcorn cart, which set fire to the audience risers,



Which collapsed with 48 people sitting on them.
- Well, I'm sure it wasn't your fault.
- No, it was. But I did learn a valuable lesson about the trapeze.
Don't drop people.

white people ruined the non sexual intimacy of nakedness methinks

i think that for a species that come into the world naked and have such an easy time understanding sex, its ironic that the world at large cant accept that intimacy cant occur outside of sexual desire. there is intimacy in a shared bath between a mother and her child. between brothers sharing a bed. between friends changing in the same room.

and i said white people bc i feel like literally everyone else figured that shit out already? like in public bath houses and women walking around with their breasts exposed. europe got a hold of chriatianity and decided to put a worldwide ban nakedness and put these restrictions on the human body, bastardizing the nature with which we come into the world. its dirty, its deviant, its dangerous to be exposed in the appropriate spaces or ones own home.

the way young people have to cover up in their homes before guests come, the way shorts and other summer clothes are only perceived as sexual in nature and not the most effective way of combating a million degree heat, the way people freak out when they see a bra strap like it wasnt them who made bitches wear bras in the first place

I always think of one of my co-workers at a husky farm near Inari, who told me apropos of nothing while we were clearing out dog shit together that he thought the reason Americans are "like that" ("like what, Veikka" got the response "you know what I mean") is because "they never see their grandma's tits." His logic was that "in Finland, you go to the sauna with your grandma from when you're a baby, and you see her naked, and this is years and years before you ever see any porn, so you know before you see any of it that it's temporary and fake. And when you get a girlfriend later, you know it's only a matter of time before her tits look like that too, you accept this. And Americans don't know that! They don't! They look at porn, and then they get a wife, and then they're surprised and bitter when she gets old - it's true!"

Like, to be clear, I think Veikka's analysis might have been missing more than a bit of nuance, this is the same guy whose motto was "Driving 600km south to Rovaniemi to get therapy is expensive, chopping wood till you don't care about it anymore is free", but I do occasionally still look at some British or American take online and think to myself, in his voice, "they've never seen their grandma's tits"
